PĀLI GLOSSARY

PREFACE.

In issuing the present part of the Pāli Reader I ought to express my sincere regret that various circumstances have so much retarded the final revision and printing of the glossary, the conclusion of which I know has been expected long ago by not a few scholars. As has been promised in the preface to Part I. this glossary includes the vocabulary of the whole text of Dhammapada, and I have upon the whole done my best to make it as complete as possible. It has been my aim by this to supply the young student with a sufficient help for the first years' study, untill he will be able to work inpendently, and I have therefore above all striven to arrange the materials so that every passage in the texts which might be supposed to present even the slightest difficulty to the beginner should not be passed by in silence. Whether I have succeeded in my explanations in such cases, where I differ from the usual interpretation, I must leave to my critics to judge of. With regard to the lexicographical system introduced into this glossary I need not to say much; it is of course, as to the outer form, in many respects different from that of the Dictionary of Childers: in addition to the Indian order of the letters I have introduced all declinable words in their stems (only with a few exceptions, e. g. pronouns like ahaṁ, bhavaṁ, etc.); where the stems are ending in consonants these have been printed in Italics, the reason for which I hope will be understood: ghosavat, cetas, muddhan, gandhin, pitar (the latter I have considered more practical than pitu). The verbs ought in my opinion to be given in their present indicative (3. sing.), as has also been done by Childers, together with reference to the Sanskrit roots; so I have not paid any attention to roots or forms given by the native Pāli-grammarians, my task only being to deal with the texts themselves, and nothing has been quoted, that cannot be traced in the litterature. In many single cases I have had an indispensable support in the exhaustive lexicographical collections of V. Trenckner (now in the Copenhagen University Library), especially where my own collections were not sufficient to state a certain signification, form, or gender of a word; the abbreviation (Tr.) added here and there in the glossary will show that also on other accounts I have derived some benefit from suggestions of his accidentally occurring among the vast number of his quotations. With regard to typographical arrangements I beg to remark that asterisks have been put before those Pāli words to which no Sanskrit equivalents can be traced; likewise generally before compounds not found in the Sanskrit Dictionary of Monier Williams, the new edition of which has been of great help to me during the whole work; certain forms of the Pāli words are put within parentheses in order to show that they do not occur in the Reader or the Dhpd., whilst brackets put to a heading-word (e. g. [samāsati]) denote that this particular form of the word is not traced. Of the English translations it ought to be observed that those within double inverted comma are simply quotations from my predecessors; other typographical indications, abbreviations, etc., I hope will easily be understood. Before using the book my readers are earnestly requested to insert the corrections and additions given on the last pages into the text of both parts.

In conclusion I wish to address my best thanks to my young friend Mr. Joh. Eyser, Assistant Librarian at our University Library, to whom I am indebted for his kind assistance in correcting the proofs.

Copenhagen, September 1907.

a-[4], negative particle, prefixed to the following words, 1) to nouns (subst., adj., adv.), 2) to verbal forms (mostly to part., grd., ger. or inf., rarely to finite verbal forms). In comp. with words beginning originally with two consonants the first cons. is generally doubled (v. a-ppaṭivattiya, a-paccakkhāya), and before vowels it has always the form an- (v. below). As to the signification it is often opp. to sa- (q. v.) and synom. with the particles na-, nir-, vi- (vinā-?). Sometimes this particle is found repeated: an-a- (as a kind of stronger negation (?), cp. an-abhāvakata [but an-a-kāma, not unwilling]). It is doubtful whether this particle is contained in comp. like phalāphala, maggāmagga etc. (q. v.). [R. Otto Franke: a-pacasi, ZDMG. XLVIII, 84 (cp. a-sakkoti, Dhpd. *an-a-bhāva-kata, mfn. become not existent, annihilated, n. ~aṁ (rūpaṁ Tathāgatassa). The often recurring phrase „anabhāvaṁ gameti", to annihilate, seems to infer that we have to take an-a- in a negative sense, as a kind of stronger negation (cp. Tr. PM. 64,25, who considers [0]-kata an error for [0]-gata, due to the preceeding tālāvatthukata). In Prākṛit a similar use of aṇa- has been traced in not a few instances, (cp. Pischel, Gramm. d. Prākṛit-Spr. § 77). I should, however, be inclined to think that this phenomenon is only a secondary development, having no true base in the original language; thus sa. anabhāvakṛta would mean „made not non-existing" ɔ: brought into a state in which it can neither be said to exist nor not to exist; in this case an-abhāva would be adj. „free from annihilation" (a-bhāva being taken in a kind of positive value, as Fausbøll suggests), and [0]-kata would be correct. cp. anamatagga.

II 56, 2), but Jacobi and Pischel have shown that anamatagga must be identical with Prākṛit: aṇavadagga or aṇavayagga and have taken it = Sa. *a-namadagra (√nam) „dessen Anfang sich nicht verändert, endlos" (Jacobi, Erzähl. 33,17. Pischel, Gramm. §251. cp. an-abhāvakata above).

dussa, 15,19, according to the Comm. gen. pron. demonstr. = amussa (cp. asu, amuka), but this can hardly be correct; the reading dussaṁ which, in spite of the Comm., has been maintained by the Cingalese Mss., ought no doubt to be preferred; dussa, n. (sa. dūshya, dūçya or dūrça) a kind of woven stuff, occurs frequently in the Pāli texts; hence *dussika, m. a manufacturer of that stuff, or a cloth-seller (Jāt. *dhona, mfn. (probably = dhota, pp. dhovati, to wash; sa. dhauta, √dhāv [2]) pure, purified from sin. The commentators agree in explaining this word by dhuta-pāpa (v. dhuta, √dhu, dhunāti) or by dhuta-kilesa = buddha (Pj. ad Sn. v. 834 & Ps. ad MN. ch. 56). Fausbøll, Gloss. Sn. p. 203 refers it to √dhu, to shake, which after all may be closely related to dhovati; but it is questionable whether this word is contained in the comp. ati-dhona-cārin (q. v. Dh. 240). I think it better to take atidhona = sa. atidhāvana fr. vb. atidhāvati, to transgress. A subst. n. dhona is mentioned in the Comm. on Dh. v. 240 (= the 4 paccayas, v. Childers) and on MN. ch. 56 (= ñāṇa; hence dhona, mfn. 'tena samāgato').

*dhorayha, m. (fr. *dhorvayha, sa. *dhaurvahya, abstr. fr. dhūrvaha) a beast of burden. — ⁰-sīla, mfn. having the virtue of a (good) draught-cattle, "much enduring"; acc. m. ~aṁ, Dh. 208.

dhovati, vb. (sa. dhāvati, √dhāv [2]) to wash, to clean by rinsing or rubbing (acc.); aor. 3. sg. dhovi (pāde) 57,16; ger. ~itvā, 22,25 (mukhaṁ); 41,19 (khaggaṁ); 82,21 (bhājanaṁ); adhovitvā (pātiṁ) 56,25; pp. dhota or (more rarely) dhovita : hatthe dhovita-kāle ("when he was washing his hands") 41,13. cp. dhona & next.

dhovana, n. (sa. dhāvana) washing; mukha-dhovanatthāya gantvā ("when he went to wash his face") 21,28; hattha-⁰, 56,25 (washing the hands, or : water for washing?).
