Pativratānāṃ lokā(ḥ) ("the worlds of the faithful wives"): IX, 2896.

[Pativratāmāhātmyaparvan] ("the section about the greatness of the faithful wife") (cf. Pativratāyā māhātmyaṃ Sāvitryāḥ). § 545: Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Mārkaṇḍeya related, on account of Kṛshṇā: The Madra king Açvapati, the husband of Mālavī, was old and childless. After eighteen years of vows and offerings to Sāvitrī, Sāvitrī granted him a boon; he asked for many sons, but was promised a daughter. She was called Sāvitrī. As nobody asked her in marriage, she was sent to look for a husband herself (III, 293). She chose Satyavat, the son of the Çālva king Dyumatsena (the husband of Çaibyā), who had been blinded and deprived of his kingdom and lived as an ascetic in the forest. Satyavat equalled Rantideva Sāṅkṛti, Çibi Auçīnara, Yayāti, etc., but Nārada said: "Within a year of this day he will die"; then Nārada went to heaven (III, 294). After her marriage Sāvitrī dressed in bark garments, etc. (III, 295). She counted the days, and having ascertained that her husband would die on the fourth day following, she observed a trirātra vow; on the fourth day all the ascetics uttered benedictions that she should never suffer widowhood; she would not eat before the sun set. She followed Satyavat as he, taking his axe, set out for the woods (III, 296). He fell ill and slept with his head on her lap. Yama himself—and not his emissary—came with a noose in his hand and pulled out of the body of Satyavat a person of the size of a thumb, bound it in the noose and proceeded in a southern direction. Sāvitrī followed him and was granted five boons: (1) that her father-in-law should attain his eyesight and be strong; (2) that her father-in-law should regain his kingdom and never fall off from his duties; (3) that her father should have 100 sons; (4) that she and Satyavat should have 100 sons "begotten from both of us"; (5) that Satyavat should be restored to life and live 400 years. Yama untied the noose; she went back to the corpse and placed his head on her lap. Satyavat regained his consciousness. He was anxious about his parents, and they returned to the hermitage (III, 297). Meanwhile Dyumatsena had regained his sight, but was anxious at not finding Satyavat. He was comforted by the brahmans Suvarcas, Gautama, Bharadvāja, Dālbhya, Āpastamba, and Dhaumya. A little while afterwards Satyavat and Sāvitrī reached the hermitage. Sāvitrī narrated everything that had happened and was praised by the ṛshis (III, 298). Meanwhile the enemy of Dyumatsena had been slain by his minister, and Dyumatsena then again became king of the Çālvas. Sāvitrī after a long time gave birth to 100 sons, and her father also got 100 sons by Mālavī. "So also Kṛshṇā will rescue ye all." Yudhishṭhira and his brothers continued to live in the Kāmyaka forest (III, 299).

Pativratāyā ākhyāna(ṃ) ("the story of the faithful wife"). § 11 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 469 (i.e. Pativratopākhyāna).

Pativratāyā māhātmya(ṃ) Sāvitryāḥ ("the greatness of the faithful wife Sāvitrī"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 326 (i.e. Pativratāmāhātmyaparvan).

[Pativratopākhyāna] ("the story of the faithful wife") and [Brāhmaṇavyādhasaṃvāda] ("a conversation between a brahman and a hunter") (cf. Pativratāyā ākhyānaṃ). § 479 (Mārkaṇḍ.): Questioned by Yudhishṭhira about the virtue of women, Mārkaṇḍeya, saying that the work of a mother is more difficult than that of a father, and that for women neither sacrifices nor çrāddhas nor fasts are of any efficacy, but that they can win heaven only by serving their husbands (III, 205), related: When the brahman Kauçika, who had studied the Vedas and the Upanishads, was reciting the Vedas under a tree, a female crane befouled his body, and looked upon with anger by Kauçika fell to the ground. Kauçika regretted his angry deed. When he had entered a village in order to procure alms, in a certain house the wife first served her husband, who came home tired and hungry, with food, etc. (description), and then began to conciliate the angry Kauçika, who blamed her for exalting her husband above the brahmans. She said that she was no she-crane, that she knew that the ocean had been made brackish and undrinkable by the wrath of the brahmans, that the fire of their wrath had not to this day been extinguished in the forest of Daṇḍaka, but that she regarded her husband as her supreme god, and deserved forgiveness, that anger is a foe to men within themselves, and that the gods know him to be a brahman who has abandoned anger and passion, etc., and who, though himself injured, never returns the injury, etc., that virtue (dharma) is difficult to understand, but must be based on truth; the ancients have declared that virtue depends on çruti, but it is variously defined (bahudhā dṛçyate) and subtle to be understood (sūkshma); "thou art cognisant of virtue and studiest the Vedas; but I think, however, that thou dost not know what virtue really is; a fowler (vyādha) in Mithilā will discourse to thee on virtue." Kauçika blessed her, and returned to his abode, reproaching himself (III, 206).—§ 480: He set out for Mithilā (description), ruled over by Janaka, and found out the fowler, who was seated in a butcher's yard, selling venison and buffalo meat to a large crowd of buyers; but he at once went to Kauçika, and proving that he knew why he had come, he led him to his abode, where he honoured him duly, and explained to him that, notwithstanding his cruel trade, which he had inherited from his sires and grandsires, and which belonged to his caste by birth, he led a virtuous life, serving his superiors and old people, speaking truth, never envying others, giving to the best of his power, etc. In the kingdom of Janaka there did not exist a single subject that did not follow the duties of his caste. He did not slay the boars and buffaloes himself, nor did he eat meat himself; he fasted during the day and ate in the night; "even though the behaviour of his order be bad, a person may yet be himself of good behaviour; so also a person may become virtuous, although he may by profession be a slayer of animals." It is the fault of the kings when the subjects decay, and monsters, dwarfs, etc., are produced, but Janaka ruled justly. If one repents a wrong done by him, he is delivered from his sin (v. 13751). If a man seeks redemption (kalyāṇam abhipadyate) after having committed a sin, he becomes purified of all his sins (v. 13756). It is temptation (lobha) that constitutes the basis of sin. Then he gave some advice as to what is virtuous conduct (v. 13794 foll.: "these three are said to constitute the perfect way (padaṃ) of the virtuous: a man must not do wrong to anybody, he must give alms, and must always be truthful"); (v. 13797 foll.: "freedom from malice, forbearance, peace of mind, contentment, pleasant speech, renunciation of desires and anger, virtuous conduct, and actions regulated according to the ordinances of the sacred texts, constitute the perfect way (mārgaṃ) of the virtuous") (III, 207). The fowler and the animals slain by him are driven by their karman in a former life. In days of yore 2,000 animals and 2,000 cows used to be killed every day in the kitchen of king Rantideva; at the cāturmāsya animals are sacrificed; the çruti says, "The fires are fond of meat" (v. 13812), and at the sacrifices animals are killed by the regenerate, and these animals are purged of sin, and by mantras go to heaven. Regarding animal food this rule has been laid down by munis: Whoever partakes of animal food after having first offered it duly and respectfully (yathāvidhi yathāçrāddhaṃ) to the gods and the Pitṛs, is not polluted by the act. The çruti says, "Such a man is not one who partakes of animal food," and a brahman who has intercourse with his wife during her season is a brahmacārin. King Saudāsa, under the influence of a curse, ate human flesh. Agriculture is considered to be praiseworthy, though the plough destroys many creatures. Seeds of rice, etc., are all living creatures. As to hunting and the cutting of trees and herbs, many creatures live in trees and fruits and water. The earth and the air are all swarming with living organisms, which are unconsciously destroyed by men from mere ignorance (III, 208). When life is at stake and in the matter of marriage, it is justified to tell an untruth. Whichever conduces most to the good of all creatures is considered to be truth (satyaṃ) (v. 13845; cf. v. 13990). The fowler discoursed upon the influence of karman upon metempsychosis and salvation (mokṣha; Brahmaṇaḥ padaṃ, v. 13895) (III, 209).—§ 481: Questioned by Kauçika about the senses, the fowler discoursed about the sinful (in thought, word, and action (v. 13906); the evolution of sin is this: First manas is bent on vijñāna; thence successively originate kāma, roṣha, karman, rāga, dveṣha, lobha, moha, vyāja, adharma, pāpa). The virtuous man discerns these evils by means of his spiritual insight (v. 13908).—§ 482: Then he shortly enumerated the elements of the brāhmī vidyā (the universe, consisting of the five great elements, space, wind, fire, water, and earth, is Brâhman [neuter]; their qualities: sound, touch, form, flavour, and taste; manas, buddhi, ahaṅkāra; the five senses, ātman, rajas, sattva, tamas; the last seventeen are "rāçir avyaktasañjñakaḥ", in all (with the objects of senses and the manifest and the unmanifest) twenty-four (caturviṃçaka ity esha vyaktāvyaktamayo guṇaḥ) [read gaṇaḥ, cf. Hopkins, Great Epic, p. 34] (III, 210).—§ 483: A somewhat more detailed explanation of the five elements and their qualities. The terms vyakta and avyakta (v. 13931). Salvation, etc., are dependent on self-discipline (tapas), that is impossible without subduing the senses. The body is like a chariot, the coachman being the soul, and the horses the six senses (III, 211).—§ 484: The three qualities sattva, rajas, and tamas (III, 212).—§ 485: The five vital airs (prāṇa, samāna, apāna, udāna, vyāna), that are all seated (pratishṭhitāḥ, v. 13973) in the navel, and by whose collision the internal fire is generated that digests the food. The arteries (nāḍyaḥ), issuing from the heart in all directions, carry the essence of food (annarasān) acted upon by the ten prāṇas. The perception of the internal spirit, purification of the heart, destroys the good and evil effects of actions and leads to eternal beatitude. That state of peace and purification of heart (prasādasya, v. 13984) is likened to the state of a person who in a cheerful state of mind (tṛptaḥ) sleeps soundly (sukhaṃ), or to a lamp shining on a windless spot, well kindled. Community with Brâhman cannot be taught to us even by the guru (v. 13992) (III, 213).—§ 486: Saying "Thou shalt see by what means I have attained to this blissful state", the fowler introduced Kauçika to his parents, whom he honoured together with his wife and children like gods (description; v. 14025: "I do what is agreeable to them, even though it be not strictly justifiable") (III, 214).—The fowler said: "Thou hast wronged thy father and thy mother, for thou hast left home without their permission, for the purpose of learning the Vedas, and they have become blind from grief at thy loss. Thereby thy ascetic merit, etc., have become useless to thee. Do return home this very day." Kauçika acknowledged that the fowler had rescued him when he was on the point of falling into hell, and that he did not consider him to be a çūdra, as it was very difficult for a çūdra to learn the eternal religion (dharmaḥ); his being a çūdra must surely be due to any action in a former birth; this Kauçika wished to learn.—§ 487: The fowler told: "I was formerly a brahman, son of an eminent brahman, and versed in the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas, and friend of a king, who was accomplished in the Dhanurveda, and thence skilled in archery myself; one day, when I accompanied the king on a hunting expedition, I killed a ṛshi, whom I took for a deer, and was cursed by him to be born as a fowler in the çūdra caste (III, 215); but I prevailed upon him to grant me that I should remain a pious man and honour my parents, and thereby attain great perfection (siddhiṃ), remember my past life, and again become a brahman. I took the ṛshi to the hermitage, and he did not die."—Kauçika saluted him respectfully, and having returned home he honoured his old parents (III, 216).

Pāvana [2], a Viçvadeva. § 749 (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 91η, 4335 (enumeration).

Pāvana [3] = Vishṇu (1000 names).

[Pavana-çālmali-saṃvāda(ḥ)] ("the discourse between the Wind-god and the çālmali-tree"). § 654*b* (Āpaddh.): Bhīshma said: There was a lordly çālmali-tree on the Himavat. One day Nārada praised it, saying that Pavana must be its friend and protector, since he spared it, though he eradicates the tallest and strongest trees (XII, 154). The çālmali said that the Wind was not its friend, but that it was stronger itself than the Wind. Nārada warned him, saying that the Wind was stronger than even Indra, etc. (a) (XII, 155). Informed by Nārada, the Wind came and rebuked the çālmali-tree, saying that he had spared it because Brahmán, while creating the world, had for a time rested under it. The çālmali laughed and challenged the Wind to show his power, which the Wind threatened to do next day. When night came the çālmali reflected that all that it had said to Nārada was false, that it was in reality weaker than other trees, and inferior in might to the Wind; "but in intelligence no tree is my equal" (XII, 156). The çālmali then caused all its branches to be cut off. The Wind smiled; the çālmali felt great shame, and, remembering the words of Nārada, repented greatly of his folly.

[Pavan-Ārjuna-saṃvāda] ("conversation between the Wind and Arjuna Kārtavīrya"). § 772*b* (Ānuçāsanik.): Bhīshma said: The Haihaya king Arjuna Kārtavīrya, with 1,000 arms, became the lord of the whole of this world (i.e. the earth) [residing] in Māhishmatī; he gave large gifts to Dattātreya, who granted him four boons: that he should have 1,000 arms in battle, but only two at home; that he should subjugate the whole earth righteously, and sway her with vigilance; and that whenever he might happen to go wrong, the righteous should set him right. A. now regarded himself as having no equal. A celestial voice said that the brahman is superior to the kshatriya; A. maintained that the brahmans take refuge with the kshatriyas; what the virgin Gāyatrī had said from the sky was not true (asatyaṃ, so B. and Nīl.). "I shall bring the skin-clad brahmans under my subjection." At these words of A. the invisible goddess (Gāyatrī) became agitated (vitrastā 'bhūn niçācarī; cf. Nīl.). Then Vāyu (wind) warned A., addressing him from the air. Asked by A. what kind of earthly creature the brahman is, if he resembles the wind, water, fire, sun, or sky (XIII, 153), Vāyu praised the brahmans above all, citing Kaçyapa (c), Aṅgiras (d), Gautama (e), [Kapila] (f), Aurva (g), and Dattātreya; even Agni (h) and Brahmán (i) are brahmans; the large kingdom of the Daṇḍakas was destroyed by a brahman; the ocean, that was full of crystal water, cursed by the brahmans, became saline in taste. Arjuna remained silent (XIII, 154). Vāyu repeated the story of Kaçyapa in detail, and asked Arjuna if he knew a kshatriya superior to Kaçyapa. Arjuna remained silent. Then Vāyu related the story of Utathya (j) (XIII, 155). Arjuna remained silent. Vāyu then described the greatness of Agastya (k). Arjuna remained silent. Vāyu related a feat of Vasishṭha's (l) (XIII, 156). Arjuna remained silent. Vāyu related a feat of Atri's (m). Arjuna remained silent. Vāyu related a feat of Cyavana's (n) (XIII, 157). Arjuna remained silent. Vāyu related the history of the Kapas (p). Arjuna praised the brahmans, mentioning Dattātreya. Vāyu told him always to protect them; "a terrible danger threatens thee from the Bhṛgus; that will take place after a time" (XIII, 158).

Pavanasya hrada(ḥ) ("the lake of the Wind-god"), a tīrtha. § 364 (Tīrthayātrāp.): III, 83, 6075.

Here the gods with Indra and the Prajāpatis performed sacrifices. Here king Gaya Āmūrtarāyasa satisfied Indra with soma in seven horse-sacrifices, where all the articles, which else are made of wood or earth, were of gold. Seven sets of these articles were prepared by him, and at the top of each sacrificial stake seven rings were fastened; the gods themselves with Indra erected the sacrificial stakes. Indra became delighted with soma and the brahmans with the dakshiṇās, which were innumerable as the sand-grains, the stars, or the raindrops. Gaya presented the brahmans with golden cows (otherwise PCR.) made by Viçvakarman, so numerous were his caityas that but little space was left on the earth. Thus Gaya attained to the worlds of Indra (lokān . . . Aindrān); he who bathes in the P. attains to the same: III, 121, 10304.—§ 403 (do.): III, 121, 10306 (visited by Yudhishṭhira, etc., on his tīrthayātrā).—§ 574 (Jambūkh.): VI, 9λ, 324, 327.

Prabhāsotpattikathana(m) ("on the origin of Prabhāsa"). § 615 (Baladevat.): Daksha had twenty-seven daughters, married to Soma, connected with the several constellations serving to help men in calculating time, all beautiful; Rohiṇī, however, was the foremost in beauty. As Soma lived long with Rohiṇī, his other wives complained to Daksha, who got them reconciled. As Soma, however, still continued to live with Rohiṇī exclusively, his other wives once more approached Daksha, who now threatened to curse him. His threats were not, however, heeded, and when the wives complained a third time, Daksha cursed Soma, so that he was affected with phthisis. His sacrifices, etc., were in vain; the herbs became tasteless and failed to grow, etc. The gods prevailed upon Daksha to withdraw the curse on condition that Soma should behave equally towards all his wives, and bathe in the tīrtha (sc. Prabhāsa) where the Sarasvatī mingles with the ocean, and adore Mahādeva there; then he should during the one half of the month wane every day and during the other wax every day. Bathing there on the day of new moon, he was restored. Daksha told Soma not to disregard women and brahmans. Prabhāsa became the foremost of all tīrthas; Soma bathes there on every recurring day of the new moon and regains his form and beauty; thence comes its name Prabhāsa, because Soma there regained his effulgence (prabhā).

[Prajāgaraparvan(°va)] ("section relating to the sleeplessness of Dhṛtarāshṭra," the 59th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Prajāgara). § 557: Dhṛtarāshṭra, after Sañjaya had left him, requested Vidura to tell him what may be good for a person that is sleepless and burning. Vidura said that Yudhishṭhira was worthy of being the sovereign over the three worlds, while the qualities of Dhṛtarāshṭra were the very reverse of those; Dhṛtarāshṭra had no right to a share in the kingdom owing to his being blind; Vidura blamed him for having bestowed on Duryodhana, Çakuni, Karṇa, and Duḥçāsana the management of the empire. Then he explained the marks of a wise man and of a fool, quoting Bṛhaspati's answer to Indra, and alluding to the conversation between Sudhanvan and Asurendra [i.e. Prahlāda] in relation to the son of the latter (V, 33). Continuation of Vidura's discourse (V, 34).—§ 558: Vidura said that as long as a man's good deeds are spoken of in this world, so long he is glorified in heaven, and cited the old story about the conversation between Virocana (q.v.) and Sudhanvan, both suitors for Keçinī's hand. "Entrusting the cares of thy kingdom to Duryodhana, Çakuni, the foolish Duḥçāsana, and to Karṇa, how canst thou hope for prosperity? Possessed of every virtue, the Pāṇḍavas depend on thee as their father; oh, confide thou in them as thy sons" (V, 35).—§ 559: Vidura related the old history of the discourse between Átreya and the Sādhyas, who received instruction from Átreya when he was wandering as a beggar ("... One should not return the slanders or reproaches of others, for the pain that is felt by him who suffers silently, consumes the slanderer; and he that endures, succeeds also in appropriating the virtues of the slanderer—the slanderer's merits become his ... The very gods desire company of that man who, when abused, does not himself return the abuse nor cause others to return it, or who, when beaten, does not himself return the blow nor cause others to do it, and who wishes not the slightest injury to him that injures him ..."). Then he explained what are those families that are called high ("... let none in our race serve a king as minister") (V, 36). Vidura spoke of the seven and ten kinds of foolish men according to Manu Svāyambhuva; of the reasons why not all men attain the allotted period of life (100 years according to the Veda), etc. But Dhṛtarāshṭra could not abandon his son (V, 37–40).

§ 603 (Nārāyaṇāstramokshap.): VII, 202$_{KK}$, 9630.—§ 660*b* (Bhṛgu-Bharadvājasaṃv.): XII, 184, 6844 (°āt praṇīyate prāṇī), 189, 6965.—§ 660*c* (do.): The wind or breath called Prāṇa residing within the head, and the heat that is there, cause all kinds of exertion. That Prāṇa is the living creature, the universal soul, the eternal Being, and the Mind, Intellect, and Consciousness of all living creatures, etc. Thus the living being is, in every respect, caused by Prāṇa to move about and exert . . . That heat, residing between Apāna and Prāṇa, in the region of the navel, operates, with the aid of those two breaths, in digesting all food that is taken by a living creature. There is a duct beginning from the mouth down to the anal canal. Its extremity is called the anus. From this main duct (srotas) numerous subsidiary ones branch out in the bodies of all living creatures. In consequence of the rush of the several breaths (Prāṇa, Samāna, etc.) those breaths mingle together. The heat (agniḥ) [that dwells in Prāṇa, PCR.] is called Ūshman. It is this heat that causes digestion . . . The breath called Prāṇa, the bearer of a current of heat, descends [from the head, PCR.] downwards to the extremity of the anal canal and thence is pushed upwards again. Coming back to its seat in the head it once more sends back the heat it bears. Below the navel is the region of digested matter, and above it that for the food not yet digested. The navel is the depositary of all the forces of life, which sustain the body. Urged by the ten kinds of breaths the ducts (nāḍyaḥ), branching out from the heart, convey the liquid juices that food yields upwards, downwards, and in transverse directions. The main duct leading from the mouth to the anus is the path by which yogins succeed in attaining to Brahman by holding the soul within the brain. Even thus heat is planted in the breaths called Prāṇa and Apāna of all embodied creatures. That heat is always burning there like fire in any vessel: XII, 185, 6868, 6870, 6878, 6882.—§ 662*b* (Jāpakop.): XII, 200$_{\epsilon}$, 7346.—§ 667 (Mokshadh.): XII, 213, 7758.—§ 668 (Pañcaçikha-v.): XII, 219, 7939 (prāṇāpānau).—§ 677 (Mokshadh.): XII, 240, 8740 (do.); 253, 9091 (do.).—§ 695*b* (Dakshayajñavināça): XII, 285, 10337 (do.).—§ 704 (Mokshadh.): XII, 302, 11124.—§ 714*g* (Samāna): XII, 329, 12397 (son of Apāna), 12398, 12399.—§ 782*b* (Brāhmaṇagītā): XIV, 20a*, 612, 613, 614; 21, 646, 647, 653; 23, 685, 687, (691), 692, 693, 694, 696, 697, 699, 705 (the contention of the vital breaths about superiority); 24, 712, 716, 719, 722; 25, 742; 28, 789.—§ 782*g* (Guruçishyasaṃv.): XIV, 42, 1109.

Pratijñāparvan(°va) ("the section including the vow of Arjuna," the 74th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.).—§ 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 339.—§ 596: In the evening, when Arjuna, having slain large numbers of Saṃçaptakas, proceeded towards his tent, he said to Kṛshṇa that his heart was affrighted; he noticed indications of disaster; Abhimanyu did not come out with smiles to receive him, etc. He remembered that Droṇa had this day formed the circular army, which none save Abhimanyu could break, but he had not taught him how to come out of it, after having pierced it; he had heard the leonine shouts of the Dhārtarāshṭras, and Kṛshṇa had heard Yuyutsu censuring them for having slain a child instead of Arjuna, and then Yuyutsu had thrown away his weapons afflicted with rage and grief. Kṛshṇa consoled Arjuna, referring to the kshatriya duties and heaven. None save Kṛshṇa and Yudhishṭhira (who were always acceptable to him) could address Arjuna. Yudhishṭhira, addressing him, told (VII, 72) him the particulars of Abhimanyu's heroism and fall. Arjuna vowed to slay Jayadratha before the setting of the morrow's sun (his oath); even as to As., D., men, birds, snakes, P., wanderers of the night, B.-r., D.-r., etc., he said that they would not succeed in protecting him, even if he entered Rasātala, or ascended the firmament, or repaired to the city of the gods (Devapuraṃ) or the city of Diti (Diteḥ puraṃ); if the sun set before he had slain him, he would himself ascend the pyre. Arjuna bent the Gāṇḍīva, Kṛshṇa blew the Pāñcajanya, Arjuna the Devadatta (VII, 73). Having been informed by spies, Jayadratha was overwhelmed with sorrow and fear, thinking that not even Droṇa, etc. (α), not even D., G., As., U., Rā., can protect him against Arjuna; he wished to return home. Duryodhana comforted him, saying that he, Karṇa, etc. (β), would protect him. Jayadratha, accompanied by Duryodhana, repaired that very night to Droṇa and questioned him about the difference between himself and Arjuna. Droṇa said they had got the same instruction, but Arjuna was superior to Jayadratha in consequence of yoga and the hard life led by Arjuna; Droṇa would, however, protect him, forming an impenetrable array; and, moreover, death ought not to be an object of terror to him (VII, 74). Kṛshṇa remonstrated with Arjuna for his rash vow; the Kurus had expected an attack by Arjuna; now they will protect Jayadratha (who had mentioned Arjuna's encounter with Çiva, Hiraṇyapura, etc.); Karṇa, etc. (γ) would be in Jayadratha's van; Droṇa's army would be half a çakaṭa and half a lotus with a needle-mouthed array in the middle (VII, 75). Arjuna assured Kṛshṇa of his competence to accomplish his vow, notwithstanding Droṇa, Sā., R., V., A., M., with Indra, V.-D., D., P., G., Garuḍa, etc., by the means of Gāṇḍīva and the weapons he had obtained from Yama, etc. (δ), and the Brāhma weapon (VII, 76). The gods with Indra became very anxious. Sinister omens appeared in nature. Kṛshṇa went to Arjuna's abode and comforted Subhadrā (with the kshatriya duties, etc., and revenge) (VII, 77). Subhadrā lamented over Abhimanyu, and said "fie on Bhīmasena, etc." (ε), because they had not protected him. Draupadī and Uttarā came to her, lamenting. Kṛshṇa said that Abhimanyu had obtained the most laudable and enviable goal. Then he returned to Arjuna (VII, 78). Arjuna performed his usual nightly sacrifice to Çiva. Kṛshṇa with Dāruka repaired to his own tent. None in the Pāṇḍava camp slept that night, thinking of Arjuna. In the middle of the night Kṛshṇa said to Dāruka that he had resolved to fight to-morrow [if necessary]; he should equip his chariot, placing on it Kaumodakī, etc., making room for Garuḍa, and yoking thereto Balāhaka, etc. (ζ); when hearing Pāñcajanya emitting the shrill Ṛshabha note, he should come to Kṛshṇa (VII, 79). Arjuna in a dream saw Kṛshṇa, who told him not to grieve, and mentioned the Pāçupata weapon (with which Çiva slew all the Daityas in battle); if he remembered it now, he would be able to slay Jayadratha to-morrow; otherwise he should pray to Çiva. At the Brāhma hour, Arjuna saw himself sojourning through the sky (Himavat); Maṇimat, frequented by Si. and Cā., etc. (η) with Kṛshṇa, to where Çiva was seated with Pārvatī (description) (δ); Kṛshṇa and Arjuna hymned Mahādeva (VII, 80). Arjuna saw that the offerings he had made every night to Kṛshṇa had come to Çiva, and he mentally worshipped both Kṛshṇa and Çiva. Çiva then told Kṛshṇa and Arjuna where to fetch his bow and arrow from a lake of amṛta. In the lake they saw two terrible snakes; when they had uttered the Brahma Çatarudriya, the snakes assumed the forms of a bow and arrow. From Çiva's body there came out a brahmacārin of blue throat and red locks, and having showed Arjuna the use of the bow and arrow, and the mantras, he sped these weapons to that same lake. Having thus once more obtained the Pāçupata weapon, Arjuna with Kṛshṇa came back to their own camp (VII, 81).—§ 597: THE FOURTEENTH DAY. Yudhishṭhira underwent his morning rites (very copious description); Kṛshṇa visited Yudhishṭhira (VII, 82). Then also Virāṭa, etc., came (a). Yudhishṭhira asked Kṛshṇa to rescue the Pāṇḍavas, quoting Nārada. Kṛshṇa assured Yudhishṭhira of Arjuna's success (VII, 83). Arjuna came and acquainted Yudhishṭhira of his dream. Then he and Kṛshṇa and Yuyudhāna (these two in one chariot) set out to Arjuna's pavilion. Kṛshṇa equipped Arjuna's chariot (which had previously been sanctified by mantras), which Arjuna circumambulated, bow and arrows in hand. Arjuna, Yuyudhāna, and Kṛshṇa mounted the chariot. Many auspicious omens appeared. Arjuna charged Yuyudhāna to protect Yudhishṭhira in his absence (only he or Pradyumna is able to do it). Yuyudhāna proceeded to Yudhishṭhira (VII, 84).

Pṛthu[4], = Çiva: XIV, 210.—Do.[5] = Vishṇu (1000 names; only B., C. has Prathu).

Pṛthu Vainya (C. sometimes Vaiṇya), a mythical king. § 11 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 466 (°or Vainyasya yatroktam ākhyānaṃ paramarshiṇā (i.e. Mārkaṇḍeya); in the third book of Mhbhr., however, the narrative alluded to is not found).—§ 296 (Dyūtap.): II, 53, 1929 (Vainyaḥ).—§ 574 (Jambūkh.): VI, 9aa*, 314 (Vainyasya).—§ 595 (Shoḍaçarāj.): King Pṛthu Vainya in his rājasūya was installed by M.-ṛ. as emperor (sāmrājye); (etymology of Pṛthu, kshatriya, and rājan). During his time the earth yielded crops in sufficiency, etc.; the kuça blades were all of gold, etc.; when king P. went to the sea, the waves became solid; the very mountains used to open before him that he might pass through them. Once the trees, the mountains, the gods, the Asuras, the men, the Uragas, the seven ṛshis, the Yakshas, the Apsarases, and the Pitṛs came to P. and calling him their emperor (samrāṭ), etc., asked boons from him. Taking his Ājagava bow, P. caused them to milk the Earth (whom he made his daughter) by means of a calf (A), a milker (B), and vessels (C) for various kinds of milk (D): (1) [the trees]: the çāla-tree (A), the fig-tree (plakshaḥ) (B.), a vessel of udumbara wood (C), torn buds (chinnaprarohaṇaṃ) (D). (2) [The mountains]: the eastern hill (Udayaḥ parvataḥ) (A), Meru (B), a stone (açmamayaṃ) vessel (C), gems and herbs (D). (3) [The gods]: a god (Indra?) (B), things capable of bestowing strength (D). (4) The Asuras: Virocana (A), Dvimūrdhan (B), an unbaked pot (C), wine (madyaṃ) (D). (5) Men: Manu Svāyambhuva (A), Pṛthu (B), cultivation and crops (D). (6) The serpents: Takshaka (A), Dhṛtarāshṭra (B), a gourd (C), poison (D). (7) The seven ṛshis: Soma (A), Bṛhaspati (B), chandas (C), the Vedas (D). (8) The Yakshas: Vṛshadhvaja (A), Vaiçravaṇa (i.e. Kubera) (B), an unbaked pot (C), the power of disappearing at will (antardhānaṃ) (D). (9) The Gandharvas and the Apsarases: Citraratha (A), Viçvaruci (B), a lotus (C), perfumes (D). (10) The Pitṛs: Yama Vaivasvata (A), Antaka (B), silvern vessels (C), svadhā (D). "To this day the creatures exist in the same way." P. caused golden images to be made of every article on earth and bestowed them all on the brahmans at his great horse-sacrifice, also 66,000 elephants of gold; also the whole world (VII, 69): VII, 69, 2394 (Vaiṇyaṃ), 2395, 2396 (Vaiṇyaṃ), 2406 (Vaiṇyaḥ), 2408, 2414, 2421 (Vaiṇyaḥ).—§ 632*b* (Shoḍaçarāj., cf. § 595): XII, 29, 1030 (Vainyaṃ), 1031, 1032 (Vainyaṃ, repetition from § 595).—§ 641*f* (cf. Vena). When P. had sprung from the right hand of Vena, the M.-ṛ., R., and the gods told him to observe righteousness and punish the wicked, etc. Çukra became his priest, the Vālakhilyas his counsellors, the Sārasvatas his companions (Sārasvatyo gaṇas tathā), the M.-ṛ. Garga became his astrologer (sāṃvatsaraḥ); Sūta and Māgadha (who came into existence before P.) became his panegyrists, he gave to Sūta the land lying on the sea-coast (Anūpadeçaṃ), to Māgadha Magadha. P. made the earth even (in every manvantara the earth becomes uneven), removing the rocks lying around with the horn of his bow; by this means the hills and the mountains became enlarged. Then Vishṇu, etc. (δ) crowned P. and gave him rich gifts; steeds, chariots, etc., came into existence as soon as P. thought of them.

At this time there was neither decrepitude nor famine, etc., nobody had any fear from reptiles and thieves, etc.; when he proceeded to the sea, the waters used to be solidified, the mountains granted him passage, etc. He drew from the earth as a milker from a cow seventeen kinds of crops for the Y., Rā., and N., etc. He caused all creatures to regard righteousness as the foremost of all things; he was called rājan (etymology) and kshatriya (etymology), etymology of the name Pṛthivī. Vishṇu confirmed his power and entered his body in consequence of his penances; for this reason the entire universe bows to the king as to a god. At this time a gold lotus was born from Vishṇu's brow, from that lotus was born the goddess Çrī, who became the spouse of Dharma ("righteousness"); their son was Artha ("profit"); all the three were established in sovereignty. The king is really a portion of Vishṇu on earth. He who once beheld his (P.'s ?) amiable face became (becomes ?) obedient to him: XII, 59, 2234 (Vainyaḥ).—§ 656*f* (Khaḍgotpattik.): It was Pṛthu Vainya who first created the bow; he also milked the earth for very many [sorts of] grain (çasyāni) and protected the earth virtuously as before: XII, 166, 6205.—§ 673*b* (Bali-Vāsavasaṃv.): XII, 227, 8261 (among the ancient rulers of the earth).—§ 761 (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 115δ*, 5667 (did not eat meat during the month of Kārttika).—§ 770 (do.): XIII, 151μ*, 7125 (Vainyaṃ nṛpavaraṃ Pṛthvī yasyābhavat sutā | Prajāpatiṃ sarvabhaumaṃ).—§ 795 (do.): XIII, 166η*, 7680 (ādirājaḥ P°ur Vainyaḥ). § 157 : Vicitravīrya died without leaving a child. Then Satyavatī began to think how the dynasty of Dushyanta might be perpetuated, and she recollected the ṛshi Dvaipāyana and prevailed upon him to beget three children for Vicitravīrya: Dhṛtarāshṭra, Pāṇḍu, Vidura.—In consequence of a boon granted by Dvaipāyana, Dhṛtarāshṭra had 100 sons by Gāndhārī, of whom the most celebrated were Duryodhana, Duḥçāsana, Vikarṇa, and Citrasena.—Pāṇḍu had two wives: Kuntī or Pṛthā, and Mādrī. One day, when hunting, he with his arrow pierced a ṛshi cohabiting with [his wife in the shape of] a deer. The ṛshi cursed him, saying that he should also die when in such a state. Pāṇḍu then prevailed upon Kuntī to raise offspring for him, and by Dharma she had Yudhishṭhira, by Māruta (i.e. the Wind) Bhīmasena, and by Çakra (i.e. Indra) Arjuna. He then caused her to impart on Mādrī the vidyā (i.e. the mantra of invocation), and Mādrī by the Açvins had Nakula and Sahadeva. One day when Pāṇḍu, filled with desire, touched Mādrī, he immediately died, and Mādrī ascended the funeral pyre with him, after having recommended her twins to Kuntī. Then the Pāṇḍavas with Kuntī were taken by the ascetics to Hāstinapura and introduced to Bhīshma and Vidura, whereafter the ascetics disappeared from sight, while flames poured down upon the earth and the drums of the gods were heard. They then performed the obsequial rites for their father. As they were being brought up there Duryodhana became exceedingly jealous of them.—§ 158: Brief mention of Duryodhana's efforts against the Pāṇḍavas; how they are sent by Dhṛtarāshṭra to Vāraṇāvata to be burnt in a lac-house, but are rescued by Vidura; killing of Hiḍimba; they go to Ekacakrā; kill the Rākshasa Baka; go to Pāñcālanagara, obtain Draupadī, and return home.—§ 159: The eleven sons of the Pāṇḍavas: (1) Prativindhya (son of Yudhishṭhira); (2) Sutasoma (of Vṛkodara, i.e. Bhīmasena); (3) Çrutakīrti (of Arjuna); (4) Çatānīka (of Nakula);

"Parīkshit married Mādravatī, thy mother Janamejaya! thou hast begotten two sons on thy wife Vapushṭamā, named Çatānīka and Çaṅkukarṇa; and Çatānīka has on Vaidehī begot a son Açvamedhadatta."—Blessings upon the readers (of all four castes) (I, 95).

[Putradarçanaparvan] ("the section relating to the seeing of the sons," the 96th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Putradarçana). § 789: Janamejaya said: Tell me what that wonderful feat was which M.-ṛ. Vyāsa accomplished after his promise to Dhṛtarāshṭra when he had taken up his abode in the forest with Gāndhārī and Kuntī, and after Vidura had left his body and entered into Yudhishṭhira, and when all the Pāṇḍavas were in the ascetic retreat; for how many days did Yudhishṭhira stay with his men in the woods; on what food did the Pāṇḍavas support themselves with their men and wives? Vaiçampāyana said: The Pāṇḍavas passed about a month in that forest, supporting themselves on diverse kinds of food and drink. Then Vyāsa came there and Nārada, etc. (α); they sat down on sacred seats [of kuça grass] and on seats of peacock feathers; Gāndhārī, etc. (β) also sat down; they spoke of R., D., and As. Then Vyāsa said that he knew that burning grief in the heart of Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc. (γ); "let D., G., and M.-ṛ. to-day behold the energy of my penances; therefore tell me what wish of thine I shall grant to-day." Dhṛtarāshṭra wished to see his dead children and kinsmen, mentioning Duryodhana and the slaughter of Bhīshma and Droṇa. Hearing this the grief of Gāndhārī, etc. (δ) became fresh; Gāndhārī said that for sixteen years Dhṛtarāshṭra never had slept for grief; and also Kṛshṇā, etc. (ε) grieved exceedingly. Vyāsa then asked Kuntī to tell what she wished (XV, 29). Kuntī told the story of Karṇa's birth (mentioning Durvāsas, etc.); Vyāsa promised to show her Karṇa, and said that she had no fault in what had happened about the birth of Karṇa; "the gods beget after five methods (thought, word, sight, touch, and sexual union)" (XV, 30). Vyāsa promised to show everyone the persons whom they wished to see and who were in the other world (ζ); "they were all portions of D.; both G., Aps., Pç., Gh., Rā., Puṇyajanāḥ, Si., D.-ṛ., D., and Dā. met with death on the battlefield of Kurukshetra"; he explained who among the dead, etc., was what: Dhṛtarāshṭra was the Gandharva king Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc. (η). They all, Dhṛtarāshṭra with his ministers and the Pāṇḍavas and Ṛ. and G., proceeded towards the Bhāgīrathī and waited for the advent of night; at sunset they bathed and finished their evening rites (XV, 31). When night came, Vyāsa plunged into the Bhāgīrathī for a bath, and summoned all the deceased warriors, who all rose up from the water with a loud uproar, everyone presenting the same aspect that he did when clad for battle; there were Bhīshma, etc. (θ); all of them were now robed in celestial vestments and had brilliant earrings; they were free from all animosity, etc.; G. sang their praises, etc.; each of them was waited upon by bands of Aps. Vyāsa gave Dhṛtarāshṭra celestial vision; endued with celestial knowledge, Gāndhārī saw all the slain; Dhṛtarāshṭra became full of joy (XV, 32). Divested of wrath and malice, the spirits of the dead mingled with the living in happy converse (ι). Having sported with one another for that night they, taking leave from each other, returned to the places they had come from (κ), Vyāsa dismissing them within the twinkling of an eye; of Rā. and Pç. some proceeded to the Uttarakurus, others to the gods. With Vyāsa's permission, many widows plunged into the waters of the Bhāgīrathī in order to accompany their deceased lords, and proceeded to those regions where their husbands had found their abodes. Vyāsa granted to all the men there assembled the fruition of their wishes. People of diverse realms, hearing of this meeting between the dead and living, became highly delighted (XV, 33).—§ 790: Sauti said: Janamejaya filled with joy asked Vaiçampāyana, how it is possible for persons whose bodies have been destroyed to reappear in those very forms. Vaiçampāyana said: Acts are never destroyed; bodies are born of acts; so also are features, etc., quoting a çruti in the horse-sacrifice (XV, 34). Dhṛtarāshṭra had never beheld his own sons, but got spiritual vision from Vyāsa, he had learnt all the royal duties, as also the Vedas and Upanishads; Vidura attained to high success through penances. Janamejaya said: If Vyāsa shows me my father as he was when he died I may then believe all that thou hast told me. Sauti said: Then Vyāsa brought Parikshit [from the other world], and Çamīka and his son Çṛṅgin; all the counsellors and ministers of the king beheld them. Janamejaya, performing the final bath in his sacrifice, highly rejoiced; he poured the sacred water over his father, as also over himself; then he said to Āstīka that this his sacrifice was fraught with many wonderful incidents; Āstīka praised Vyāsa and the snake-sacrifice, from which Takshaka had with difficulty escaped, the worship of Ṛ., etc. Janamejaya honoured Āstīka, and then asked Ṛ. Vaiçampāyana about Dhṛtarāshṭra's further residence in the woods (XV, 35).—§ 791: Janamejaya said: Having seen his sons, etc., what did Dhṛtarāshṭra, and king Yudhishṭhira also, do? Vaiçampāyana said: Beholding that wonderful sight, the reappearance of his children, R.-ṛ. Dhṛtarāshṭra became relieved of his grief and returned to his retreat; the people and Ṛ., dismissed by Dhṛtarāshṭra, returned home. Vyāsa came and asked Dhṛtarāshṭra to dismiss the Pāṇḍavas ("thou hast heard discourses from Ṛ., the mysteries of D. from Nārada, etc."), who now had passed more than a month in the woods. Dhṛtarāshṭra addressed Yudhishṭhira affectionately, and dismissed him and his brothers. Yudhishṭhira offered to wait upon his uncle and his two mothers; Gāndhārī dissuaded him from that step. Yudhishṭhira said that his mind was wholly set upon penances, as the whole earth were empty now, etc. (α) Sahadeva, saying that he dared not leave his mother, urged Yudhishṭhira to return to the capital; he would himself remain, engaged in penances and in serving the old king and his mothers. Kuntī affectionately dissuaded her sons from remaining with her and thereby obstructing her penances. They then took leave of their mother and Dhṛtarāshṭra, who blessed and comforted Yudhishṭhira, etc. (β), and embraced them one after another. Then Gāndhārī blessed them, and Kuntī kissed them on their heads, etc. Gāndhārī and Kuntī embraced Draupadī, etc., and instructed them. Yudhishṭhira with his wives and troops and kinsmen set out for Hāstinapura (XV, 36).

Rājadharmānuçāsana ("the teaching of the duties of kings"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 351 (i.e. Rājadharmānuçāsanaparvan).

[Rājadharmānuçāsanaparvan(°va)] ("the section containing the teaching of the duties of kings," the 88th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Rājadharmānuçāsana). § 621: After the completion of the water rites by the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (a), many Brahmarshis, etc. (β), came to Yudhishṭhira. Nārada congratulated Yudhishṭhira upon his success. Yudhishṭhira lamented the loss of his kinsmen (γ); Yudhishthira at the match of dice had wondered seeing that Karṇa's feet resembled the feet of Kuntī; he inquired of Nārada, why the earth had swallowed up the wheels of Karṇa's chariot (XII, 1). Nārada recited to Yudhishṭhira the story of Karṇa's pupilage with Droṇa and Rāma (among G., Rā., Y., and D.) and the curse called down upon him by a brahman whose cow Karṇa had inadvertently slain (δ) (XII, 2); then the story of Karṇa's extraordinary powers of endurance, in consequence of which his real caste became known to Rāma (who had taught him the Brāhma weapon), who thereupon cursed him for his deceit; the worm Alarka was an Asura named Daṃça, who in the Kṛta age had ravished the spouse of Bhṛgu and been cursed by him, until he should be liberated by Paraçu-Rāma. Karṇa, arriving before Duryodhana, told him: "I have mastered every weapon" (XII, 3). Nārada said: "To a self-choice at Rājapura, the capital of the Kāliṅga king Citrāṅgada Duryodhana (with Karṇa), Çiçupāla, etc. (ε), repaired; the maiden (who was accompanied by her nurse and a guard of eunuchs) passed by Duryodhana, who then (relying upon Bhīshma and Droṇa) took her up on his chariot and abducted her by force. Karṇa, riding on his chariot, proceeded in Duryodhana's rear. The kings pursued Karṇa and Duryodhana; but Karṇa made them all turn away, and Duryodhana reached Hāstinapura with the maiden" (XII, 4). Nārada said: "The Māgadha king Jarāsandha challenged Karṇa to a single combat; at last they fought with bare arms, and Karṇa was about to sever the two portions of Jarāsandha's body that had been united together by Jarā; then Jarāsandha gave up all desire of hostility and gave unto Karṇa the town Mālinī (i.e. Campā). From that time he ruled over Campā and the Aṅgas agreeably to the wishes of Duryodhana." Allusions to XII, 2, 3, etc. (ζ) (XII, 5). D.-ṛ. Nārada became silent; Yudhishṭhira grieved; Kuntī comforted Yudhishṭhira by telling him that neither she nor Sūrya could dissuade Karṇa from fighting the Pāṇḍavas (XII, 6). Yudhishṭhira's lament (η) before Arjuna; he wished to renounce the sovereignty (XII, 7). Arjuna addressed Yudhishṭhira, justifying war and approving of the acquisition of wealth, quoting Nahusha (who cried fie on the state of poverty, in which he had done many wicked acts, and which is for recluses and Ṛ.), and citing the conduct of the gods and Dā., which is sanctioned by the Vedas; "this earth formerly belonged to king Dilīpa, etc. (θ); she now belongs to thee; a great sacrifice awaits thee; if thou dost not perform this sacrifice, the sins of this kingdom shall all be thine; those subjects whose king performs a horse-sacrifice . . . all become pure," as shown by the example of Mahādeva (Çiva (b)); "this is the great path called Dāçaratha (affording place for ten waggons, i.e. the sacrifice [Nīl.])" (XII, 8). Unmoved by Arjuna's words, Yudhishṭhira desired to lead the life of a religious recluse (XII, 9). Bhīma's address to Yudhishṭhira commending sovereignty (XII, 10).—§ 622: Arjuna recited the story of the discourse between Çakra (in the shape of a golden bird) and certain youths (Ṛ.) desirous of leading a forest life (XII, 11). —§ 623: Nakula addressed Yudhishṭhira, blaming renunciation and commending the life of a householder (XII, 12). Sahadeva recommended to Yudhishṭhira a life of action with the soul free from attachments (XII, 13). Draupadī reminded Yudhishṭhira of his former counsels (a) (XII, 14). Arjuna praised him who wields the rod of chastisement; "Indra, by the slaughter of Vṛtra, became the great Indra; those among the gods that are given to slaughtering others are adored much more by men; Rudra, etc. (β) are all slaughterers; all people bend to these gods, but not to Brahmán or Dhātṛ or Pūshan at any time, except a few men of noble disposition" (XII, 15). Bhīma's second address to Yudhishṭhira (γ), urging him to subdue his grief (XII, 16). Yudhishṭhira exposed the folly of earthly enjoyments quoting Janaka (observant of the religion of moksha): "my treasures are immense; yet I possess nothing; if again the whole of Mithilā were burnt, nothing of mine will be burnt" (XII, 17).—§ 624: Arjuna recited the story of the discourse between the Videha king Janaka (who had shaved his head) and his queen (the princess of Koçala), in which the latter explained the claims of a life of poverty and renunciation (XII, 18).—§ 625: Yudhishṭhira's reply to Arjuna on the vanity of wealth (XII, 19). —§ 626: Devasthāna pointed out to Yudhishṭhira that the period had not come when he could retire into the woods (a) (XII, 20), and recommended the assumption of sovereignty with his soul freed from attachment, quoting a discourse which Bṛhaspati delivered to Indra; the Ṛ., etc., adopt the religion of Exertion (not Emancipation), and attain to heaven through their acts (XII, 21).—§ 627: Arjuna justified before Yudhishṭhira the slaughter of foes in battle: "Indra, himself, though a brahman, became a kshatriya in his acts, and battled with his sinful kinsfolk 810 times" (XII, 22).—§ 628: Vyāsa dissuaded Yudhishṭhira from a life of retirement and commended a life of domesticity, quoting a verse of Bṛhaspati ("like a snake devouring mice, the Earth devours a king that is inclined to peace and a brahman that is exceedingly attached to domesticity"), and reciting the story of R.-ṛ. Sudyumna: the brothers Çaṅkha and Likhita dwelled in two separate dwellings on the banks of Bāhudā; once, when Çaṅkha had gone out, Likhita came to his asylum and ate many ripe fruits. Çaṅkha told him to confess to the king and ask him to inflict on him the punishment of a thief. King Sudyumna would pardon him; but Likhita would not; Sudyumna then caused his hands to be cut off; Likhita, having asked pardon of Çaṅkha, was told by him to gratify D., Ṛ., and P. at Bāhudā, upon which two hands grew out. Çaṅkha said that he was not his chastiser, "but the king has been himself purified, as also thyself, along with P." That king became eminent by this act and obtained the highest success (XII, 23). Vyāsa exhorted Yudhishṭhira to grant the wishes of his brothers, perform sacrifices, and imitate the great monarchs of old, especially Hayagrīva (b) (XII, 24).—§ 629: Hearing the words of Vyāsa and seeing Arjuna angry, Yudhishṭhira declared to Vyāsa that earthly rule could give him no delight. Vyāsa answered, pointing out the virtues of Time, quoting "the old story recited by king Senajit in grief". "Engaging in battle has been said to be the sacrifice for a king; a due observance of the science of chastisement is his yoga; and the gift of wealth in sacrifices in the shape of dakshiṇā is his renunciation; all this should be regarded as acts that sanctify him" (XII, 25).—§ 630: Yudhishṭhira's reply to Arjuna recommending a life of yoga and austerities;

this is the practice of R., regarded by D. as brahmans; this is the opinion of the Vaikhānasas; the Ajāḥ, etc. (a) have all gone to heaven by means of Vedic study; by performing the acts indicated in the Vedas, battle, sacrifices, study of the Vedas, restrainment of passion, one goes to heaven by the southern path of the Sun; the northern path is travelled by those devoted to yoga, and is much applauded by those conversant with the Purāṇas; "one acquires heaven through contentment," citing the discourse of Yayāti of old (XII, 26). Yudhishṭhira censured himself for his cupidity and for the slaughter he caused of his kinsmen (β); Bhīshma had, by the energy of his weapons, burnt Ugrāyudha, etc.; Vyāsa comforted Yudhishṭhira by explaining the action of Destiny, and exhorted him to work (XII, 27).—§ 631: Vyāsa recited "the old story, that is known by the name of Açman's discourse": the Videha king Janaka, filled with sorrow, questioned the wise brahman Açman as to how a man should behave upon occasions of the accession and the destruction of both kinsmen and wealth. Açman said that Destiny and Time are inevitable; "no person can see either heaven or hell; the scriptures, however, are the eyes of the virtuous; frame thy conduct according to the scriptures." Janaka became freed from grief; "enjoy the earth, O son of Kuntī!" (XII, 28).—§ 632: Arjuna asked Kṛshṇa (who from his earliest years was dearer to Yudhishṭhira than even Arjuna himself) to dispel Yudhishṭhira's grief. Kṛshṇa asked Yudhishṭhira not to grieve for men who died heroically in battle in the observance of kshatriya duties, quoting the Shoḍaçarājopākhyāna (b), i.e. the old discourse of Nārada before Sṛñjaya when the latter was deeply afflicted with grief on account of the death of his son. Sṛñjaya was freed from grief, and Nārada gave back to him his son Suvarṇashṭhīvin, whom Parvata had given him, and who had been bereft of life; that child should live 1,000 years (XII, 29).—§ 633: Requested by Yudhishṭhira, Kṛshṇa told Nārada-Parvatopākhyāna (b) (XII, 30).—§ 634: Thereafter Nārada told Suvarṇasṭhīvisambhavopākhyāna (b) (XII, 31).—§ 635: Vyāsa exhorted Yudhishṭhira to shake off his grief and assume the reins of sovereignty. Yudhishṭhira feared that the guilt of slaughter had stained him; Vyāsa repeated his observations on Destiny (XII, 32); as Yudhishṭhira still was remorseful (a), Vyāsa repeated his observations on Time, and pointed to expiatory rites, illustrating the case by the war of 32,000 years, by which the gods, having slain Dai., gained possession of heaven, and slew 88,000 brahmans called Çālāvṛkāḥ who had joined the Dā.; "thou hast only followed the path formerly trodden by the very gods; men like you never go to hell." He recommended a horse-sacrifice as an expiation, mentioning that Indra, assisted by the Maruts, gradually performed 100 sacrifices and became Çatakratu, and is adored in the heavens by Aps., R., and D. (XII, 33). Vyāsa discoursed on expiation and indicated the acts for which there should be expiation, citing the sage Uddālaka, who caused his son Çvetaketu to be begotten by a disciple, etc. (XII, 34), and declared that by penances, religious rites, and gifts one may wash off sins if one does not commit them anew, and indicated diverse kinds of expiation for diverse kinds of sins (XII, 35). Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Vyāsa declared what food is clean and what is unclean (XII, 36). Yudhishṭhira desired to hear of the duties of kings and of the four different orders. Vyāsa, casting his eyes on Nārada, directed Yudhishṭhira to apply to Bhīshma for discourses on kingly duties, as Bhīshma, having gratified D.-ṛ. with Bṛh. at their head, had acquired a knowledge of the duties of kings, and of that science, with its interpretations, that Uçanas and Bṛhaspati know; and a knowledge of all the Vedas with their branches, from Vasishṭha and Cyavana of Bhṛgu's race; in olden days he studied under Sanatkumāra (the eldest-born son of Brahmán); he learned the duties of the Yatis from Mārkaṇḍeya; and obtained all weapons from Rāma and Indra; although childless, yet he has many regions of bliss before himself; B.-ṛ. were always his courtiers. Yudhishṭhira was ashamed to approach Bhīshma. Kṛshṇa exhorted Yudhishṭhira to rise up, shaking off his grief (β). Thus addressed by Kṛshṇa, etc. (γ), Yudhishṭhira gave up his grief and anxiety, and with his brothers and the other kings, headed by Dhṛtarāshṭra, set out for Hāstinapura. The procession described (δ) (XII, 37). The citizens welcomed Yudhishṭhira and Draupadī, etc. (ε). Yudhishṭhira entered the palace with Dhaumya and Dhṛtarāshṭra, and was blessed by the brahmans, but cursed by Cārvāka, a Rā. who had disguised himself as a brahman, and a friend of Duryodhana; the brahmans killed Cārvāka by uttering the mere sound huṃ (XII, 38).—§ 636: Kṛshṇa related: In the Kṛta age Rā. Cārvāka performed penances in Badarī; at last he solicited from Brahmán the boon of immunity from fear at the hands of every being in the universe, which Brahmán granted him, only with the limitation that he should be careful not to offend brahmans. Then he began to cause trouble to the gods; Brahmán predicted Cārvāka's friendship with Duryodhana, and that he would insult the brahmans (XII, 39).—§ 637: The ceremony of Yudhishṭhira's installation on the throne described (a); he made gifts to the brahmans, who all blessed him and his brothers (XII, 40). Yudhishṭhira answered and enjoined respect for his aged uncle, disposed of the high appointments of state (β) (XII, 41), and caused the obsequial rites (çrāddha) to be performed in honour of the slaughtered heroes (γ), and performed acts of kindness to the ladies, widowed in the battle, the destitute, the blind, and helpless (XII, 42). Then he adored Kṛshṇa (XII, 43), and assigned to his brothers proper residences from among the palaces of the Kuru princes slain in battle (δ). They passed a happy night in their respective abodes, and in the morning presented themselves before king Yudhishṭhira (XII, 44). Yudhishṭhira's gifts to diverse persons (ε). Then he addressed Kṛshṇa (with the Kaustubha), whom he found rapt in meditation (XII, 45); he uttered a hymn to Kṛshṇa, who awoke and praised Bhīshma (ζ), asking Yudhishṭhira to resort to Bhīshma for instruction. Yudhishṭhira requested Kṛshṇa to grant Bhīshma the sight of his divine person. Kṛshṇa caused Sātyaki to let Dāruka yoke his chariot with Sugrīva and Çaibya, etc. (XII, 46). Description of the bed of arrows on which Bhīshma lay, surrounded by R. Vyāsa, etc. (η). Bhīshma hymned Kṛshṇa (θ). Kṛshṇa moved by Bhīshma's adorations, bestowed upon him heavenly knowledge compassing the Past, the Present, and the Future, and went away. Those holy brahmans adored Bhīshma and Kṛshṇa. Seeing the devotion of Bhīshma, Kṛshṇa suddenly rose from his seat and ascended his chariot with Sātyaki; Yudhishṭhira and Arjuna mounted another; Bhīmasena and the twins a third; Kṛpa, Yuyutsu, and Sañjaya on their respective chariots (XII, 47).—§ 638: Then Kṛshṇa, etc. (a), proceeded to Kurukshetra (description). Kṛshṇa pointed out to Yudhishṭhira the five lakes of Rāma Bhārgava. Requested by Yudhishṭhira (XII, 48), Kṛshṇa related: Rāmopākhyāna (b). Then he proceeded quietly in his chariot (XII, 49).—§ 639: Yudhishṭhira's eulogy of Rāma (a).

Beholding from a distance the spot on which Bhīshma lay (on the banks of the river Oghavatī), Yudhishṭhira, etc. (β), descended from their chariots and approached and saluted the Ṛ. (headed by Vyāsa). Seeing Bhīshma on the point of death, Kṛshṇa addressed him kindly (γ), and eulogized him ("competent to subjugate D., G., As., Y., and Rā.; spoken of by brahmans as the ninth of the Vasus; knowing the knowledge of the cāturhotra — v. BR. — and the Sāṅkhya and Yoga, etc., the Vedas and the Purāṇas") (XII, 50). Bhīshma saluted Kṛshṇa (δ), and beheld his eternal form. Kṛshṇa said that it was owing to Bhīshma's devotion that he had displayed his celestial form to him; "those regions, O king! are ready for thee whence there is no return; fifty-six days still remain for thee to live; when Sūrya turns to his northerly course, you shall go there; D. and V., riding on their chariots, are waiting for thee invisibly." Kṛshṇa asked Bhīshma to instruct Yudhishṭhira, etc.; "when thou wilt leave this world for that, all knowledge will expire with thee" (XII, 51). Bhīshma alleged physical weakness and mental darkness as reasons for his inability to obey Kṛshṇa, and he also hesitated to speak in Kṛshṇa's presence. Kṛshṇa removed Bhīshma's pain and granted him power to recollect everything and behold the universe like a fish in a limpid stream. M.-ṛ. with Vyāsa adored Kṛshṇa with words, accompanied by Ṛc, Yajus, and Sāman verses; celestial flowers fell, and Aps. sang, etc. At sunset the M.-ṛ., rising up, saluted Kṛshṇa, Bhīshma, and Yudhishṭhira. Upon this, Kṛshṇa (etc.) (ε), returned to Hāstinapura, after having saluted Bhīshma, saying that they would return next day (description) (XII, 52). Kṛshṇa passed the night happily, performed his morning rites, and was welcomed with music and song at early dawn; asked by Kṛshṇa, Sātyaki saw Yudhishṭhira and apprised him of Kṛshṇa's readiness to accompany him into the presence of Bhīshma. Yudhishṭhira asked Arjuna to see that his chariot was made ready; then he, with the twins, etc. (ζ), proceeded to Kṛshṇa's abode. Kṛshṇa, accompanied by Sātyaki, mounted his chariot, yoked with Balāhaka, etc. (η), urged by Dāruka. The princes set out. Arrived near Bhīshma (surrounded by M.-ṛ.), Kṛshṇa, etc. (θ), alighting from their chariots, saluted R. by raising their right hands. Yudhishṭhira approached Bhīshma, eying him timidly (XII, 53).—§ 640: Many Ṛ. and Sā., etc. (α), came to Bhīshma. Nārada urged the Pāṇḍavas to take advantage of the short span of life still left to Bhīshma for soliciting him to discourse on morality. Yudhishṭhira requested Kṛshṇa to put questions to Bhīshma. Bhīshma's cheerful answer. He enquired of Kṛshṇa why he was desired to discourse on morality and the duties of kings, Kṛshṇa's divine self being best fitted to do so; Kṛshṇa explained that his motive was only the enhancement of Bhīshma's glory; "thou hast always worshipped Ṛ. and D." (XII, 54). Bhīshma consented to discourse on morality and duty, and desired Yudhishṭhira to question him. Kṛshṇa introduced Yudhishṭhira to Bhīshma, who comforted Yudhishṭhira, saying that what he had done he had done in observance of kshatriya duties. Yudhishṭhira humbly approached Bhīshma and touched his feet; Bhīshma, kissing his head, asked him to take a seat and question him without anxiety (XII, 55). Yudhishṭhira solicited Bhīshma to discourse on kingly duties which are regarded as the root of all other duties in the world. Bhīshma, bowing to Dharma, Kṛshṇa (who is Brâhman in full), and the brahmans, set forth the general duties of kings ("as regards Ṛ. also, truth is their great wealth"); he quoted two çlokas of Manu: "fire has sprung from water, the kshatriya from the brahman, and iron from stone; these three can exert their force on every other thing; but on their origins (yonishu), it is extinguished (çāmyati)"; and two çlokas of M.-ṛ. Uçanas (a brahman who rushes to battle may be chastised by a kshatriya); and a çloka of Bṛhaspati (according to B.) (a king should not always be mild, nor always fierce) (XII, 56). Continuation of Bhīshma's discourse, enjoining readiness for action on kings; quoting a çloka sung by Uçanas ("like a snake swallowing up mice"; cf. ch. 23); and one by king Marutta, agreeably to Bṛhaspati's opinion; Bāhu's son, king Sagara, who exiled his eldest son Asamañjas, who used to drown the children of the citizens in the Sarayū; Ṛ. Uddālaka who cast off his favourite son Çvetaketu, because the latter used to invite brahmans with deceptive promises of entertainment. The king should administer justice like Yama and amass wealth like Kubera. He quoted a verse sung in days of old by Bhārgava [i.e. Vālmīki (cf. Hopkins, p. 61)], in the narrative called Rāmacarita, on king[ly duties] ("one should first select a king; then should he select a wife, and then earn wealth; if there be no king, what would become of his wife and acquisitions?" (XII, 57). Continuation of Bhīshma's discourse, inculcating that protection is the very essence of kingly duties, quoting Bṛhaspati, etc. (β), and verses sung by Bṛhaspati ("by exertion the amṛta was obtained, by exertion the Asuras were slain," etc.). Vyāsa, etc. (γ), expressed their delight with the discourse. Ṛ. and the princes left Bhīshma for the night and ascended their chariots; then they bathed in the Dṛshadvatī, offered oblations of water to their ancestors, etc., and entered Hāstinapura (XII, 58).—§ 641: The next morning the Pāṇḍavas and the Yādavas set out to Kurukshetra, approached Bhīshma and saluted the Ṛ.; Yudhishṭhira enquired about the origin of the word rājan ("king"). Bhīshma's answer: In the Kṛta age sovereignty first began; the population of the earth became sinful; the Vedas, etc., were lost; D. applied to Brahmán, who composed a treatise of 100,000 lessons, on virtue, profit, and pleasure, and emancipation, etc. (description). Brahmán, addressing the gods, said that his work, aided by Chastisement (Daṇḍanīti), would protect the world. Çiva studied the great work and abridged it (then called Vaiçālāksha, in 10,000 lessons) for Indra, who abridged it further to 5,000 lessons, and called it Bāhudantaka; Bṛhaspati further abridged it to 3,000 lessons, and called it Bārhaspatya; Kāvya [i.e. Uçanas] (the preceptor of yoga) further abridged it to 1,000 lessons. Thus, in view of the period of men's lives and [the general] decrease, that science (çāstra) was abridged by M.-ṛ. Asked by the gods, who deserved to have superiority among men, Vishṇu created by his will a son, Virajas; but he inclined to renunciation; and so did Virajas' son Kīrtimat and the latter's son Kardama. Kardama's son Anaṅga became a protector of creatures, fully conversant with the science of chastisement.

Then follows the history of Pṛthu Vainya (f). Thus the tales of all past events (āgamaç ca Purāṇānāṃ), the origin of M.-ṛ., etc. (ε) were all treated of in this treatise of Brahmán (Paitāmahe çāstre) (XII, 59). Requested by Yudhishṭhira, Bhīshma discoursed on the general duties of the four orders and the special duties of each of the orders. Sacrifice has been laid down for the çūdra also, but without svāhā and vashaṭkāra or any other mantra; he should perform pākayajñas, where the dakshiṇā is pūrṇapātra (v. the note of PCR., p. 195); in days of old a çūdra of the name of Paijavana gave a dakshiṇā of 100,000 pūrṇapātras according to the ordinance called Aindrāgnya (B. Aindrāgna). Devotion cleanses all sacrifices. The members of the three other classes have all sprung from the brahmans; the brahmans are the gods of the very gods. The çūdra, who is without Ṛc, Yajus, and Sāman, has Prajāpati for his god, and devotion for his sacrifice. A verse sung in praise of sacrifice by the Vaikhānasa munis. The homas called skanna and askanna (XII, 60). The four modes of life specified (ζ). M.-r. cite a verse sung by Nārāyaṇa (XII, 61). The four stages of life have been laid down for the brahman; the other three orders do not adopt them. What duties are improper for a brahman (XII, 62). Continuation. The duties in the four stages of life stated more specifically. A kshatriya, for leading the life of Ṛ., may adopt the bhikshu mode of life; [but] a life of mendicancy is not obligatory upon the three orders (XII, 63). The nature of kingly duties. "It has been told to you how, in days of old, many kings repaired to Vishṇu (Nārāyaṇa) for the sake of the science of chastisement. S., etc. (η) are all observant of kshatriya duties. In days of old when Dā. had multiplied, Māndhātṛ became king and performed a great sacrifice from desire of beholding Nārāyaṇa (Vishṇu), who, in the form of Indra, had a discourse with him touching Vishṇu, extolling the kshatriya duties above all other duties, and citing the example of Vishṇu himself, who for the sake of D. and Ṛ. and Brahmán and the brahmans, slew all his foes among the As. (XII, 64). Indra extolled the kshatriya duties. Asked by Māndhātṛ, he set forth the duties of the Yavanas, etc. (θ). Then Nārāyaṇa (in the form of Indra), accompanied by M., repaired to his eternal abode (XII, 65). Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Bhīshma discoursed in detail on the four stages of life (XII, 66). What should be the characteristics of kingdoms. In days of old, in consequence of anarchy, men met with destruction; they made certain compacts, but soon repaired to Brahmán to get a king; Manu was prevailed upon to accept the kingdom, against getting one-fiftieth of their animals, one-tenth of their grain, one-quarter of their merit, etc. Manu then made his round through the world, checking everywhere all acts of wickedness. Men desiring happiness must choose a king (XII, 67). Why the king is regarded as a god on earth. Bhīshma recited the discourse between Bṛhaspati (the son of Aṅgiras) and Vasumanas (king of Koçala); Bṛhaspati described the evils of anarchy; the king becomes Agni, etc. (ι). Vasumanas thenceforth began to protect his subjects (XII, 68). The special duties of a king; the duties of a king in case of an invasion by a stronger monarch, quoting Bṛhaspati (v. 2619) and two verses (v. 2667–8) sung by Aṅgiras (i.e. Bṛhaspati). The blessedness of chastisement; the king causes the Kṛta age, etc. (κ), to set in (XII, 69). The thirty-six virtues that a king should possess. Hearing the words of Bhīshma, king Yudhishṭhira, protected by Bhīma, etc., worshipped Bhīshma, and from that time began to rule according to his teaching (XII, 70). Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Bhīshma explained the way in which the king should discharge the duty of protection (XII, 71). The qualifications of the king's priest: Bhīshma recited the old story about the discourse between Aila's son Purūravas and Mātariçvan, explaining the order of birth of the four classes (from Brahmán's mouth, arms, thighs, and feet, respectively) and their duties, the right of dominion appertaining to the brahman; therefore a king should appoint a priest; D., men, P., G., Us., and Rā. all depend upon sacrifices for their support, and sacrifices depend upon the king, who is Indra, Yama, and Dharma (XII, 72). The effects of a disunion between brahmans and kshatriyas: the old story about the discourse of Aila's son and Kaçyapa; the brahman and the kshatriya are said to be the progenitors of all men; in consequence of the sins perpetrated by sinful men, the god Rudra appears in the kingdom. Asked by Aila, Kaçyapa explained who Rudra is and what his acts are (Rudra exists in the hearts of men; his shape is like that of the wind-gods). Then follows a discussion of the following question: "If chastisement touches the wicked and the good equally, why should the good yet abstain from acts of wickedness" (XII, 73). The preservation and growth of the king rest upon the king's priest: Mucukundopākhyāna (g), the old narrative about the discourse between king Mucukunda and king Vaiçravaṇa (the lord of Alakā, Kubera) (XII, 74). The conduct by which a king aggrandises his subjects and wins regions of felicity hereafter. Yudhishṭhira did not see any merit in sovereignty and wished to retire into the woods. Bhīshma urged Yudhishṭhira to put forth manliness and exertion (XII, 75). The difference between brahmans engaged in their own duties and those amongst them that are not so engaged (XII, 76). The king is the lord of all wealth except what belongs to the brahmans. The old narrative of the speech made by the Kaikeya king unto a Rā., who was about to abduct him, but at last left him (XII, 77). Whether a brahman, in seasons of distress, can practise, as a means of livelihood, the duties of a vaiçya; what articles, in this case, he may sell; how the king should behave when he is opposed by all the orders of men; if kshatriyas become hostile to brahmans, how the latter should be protected; Yudhishṭhira inquired whether, upon an anarchy happening, any man that protects and rules acquires merit; Bhīshma answered in the affirmative; a king that does not or cannot protect is useless (XII, 78). The kind of persons that are eligible as royal priests; the limits or measure of the dakshiṇā (XII, 79). Who should and who should not be trusted by the king (XII, 80). How the king should conduct himself for winning over kinsmen and friends: the old story of a discourse between Kṛshṇa and Nārada: Kṛshṇa said: "My heart is worried through the cruel speeches of my kinsmen; might resides in Saṅkarshaṇa, mildness in Gada; and as regards Pradyumna, he surpasses even myself in beauty of person; [but] many others of the Andhakas and the Vṛshṇis are possessed of great prosperity and might. What can be more painful than [my relation to] Āhuka and Akrūra (v. the note of PCR., p. 260)?" Nārada said that the calamity was due to Kṛshṇa himself; "the kingdom cannot be taken back from Babhru and Ugrasena, employ soft words, etc.; the Yādavas, etc. (λ) are dependent on thee; Ṛ. always pray for thy advancement; thou art the lord of all creatures, etc." (XII, 81). The second means by which a king may win kinsmen and friends; an old story is cited of what the sage (brahmarshi) Kālakavṛkshīya had said to the Koçala king Kshemadarçin; Kālakavṛkshīya travelled through the country with a crow in a cage and observed the misdeeds of all the officers of the king, saying that it was the crow that told him all this, and related it to the king; the crow then was found pierced with a shaft within the cage; he quoted Yama as to the painful lot of those that serve the king; "this thy kingdom is like the river Sītā, boats sink in it; thy father regarded me lovingly as his friend; when distress overtook this kingdom during the reign of thy father I performed many penances." Kshemadarçin then took a minister from the kshatriya order, and appointed Kālakavṛkshīya as his purohita, and subjugated the whole earth (XII, 82). The qualifications of legislators, ministers, courtiers, and counsellors (XII, 83). The merits of agreeableness of speech; the old account of a conversation between Bṛhaspati and Çakra (i.e. Indra) (XII, 84). Which are the affairs of state that a king has to deal with, and by which persons ought they to be executed? (XII, 85). The kind of city which a king should have (XII, 86). How a kingdom should be consolidated and how it should be protected (XII, 87). How a king should behave if he wishes for wealth (XII, 88). A king should not cut down trees yielding edible fruits. How one man acquires superiority over the rest; the gifts made by thee in this world support D., P., men, N., Rā., birds, and animals (XII, 89). The duties of kings (kshatradharmān) explained by Aṅgiras Utathya to Māndhātṛ Yauvanāçva, about the king's power being only a trust for the good of his people and not for the gratification of his own caprices; the R. made the king, intending that he should be the embodiment of righteousness on earth; he is called rājan ("king") in whom righteousness shines (rājeta); he in whom there is no righteousness is called a vṛshala (yasminvilīyatedharmaḥ(=vṛshaḥ)); dharma("righteousness") comes (sravati) from dhana ("wealth") or from dhāraṇa ("restraining"); Svayambhū (Brahmán) created Dharma for the advancement and growth of creatures; in consequence of his malice towards the brahmans Çrī deserted Bali Vairocana and repaired to Indra, and Bali indulged in many vain regrets. The çrutis declare that Unrighteousness (Adharma) begat a son named Pride (Darpa) upon Çrī; Pride led many D. and As. to ruin, and many R.-r.; when the king does not restrain vice, sinful Rā., and persons of neutral sex, etc., begin to take birth even in respectable families, etc. (XII, 90). Continuation of Utathya's discourse. "The ages Kṛta, etc. (μ), are all dependent on the conduct of the king. It is said that the Creator (Dhātṛ) created power for the object of protecting the weak; weakness is indeed a great being, for everything depends upon it. The king is Yama himself. This is the way in which Indra, etc. (ν) have acted. D., R., P., and G. sing the praises, both here and hereafter, of that king whose conduct is righteous." Thus addressed by Utathya, Māndhātṛ did as he was directed, and became the sole lord of the wide earth (XII, 91). How a righteous king desirous of acting righteously should behave: the old story of what M.-r. Vāmadeva sang in ancient times to king Vasumanas (XII, 92); the consequences that result from the king's acting unrighteously. "Yayāti Nāhusha, thus having propounded the king's lore (rājopanishadaṃ), said that a king should slay even contemptible foes" (XII, 93). Continuation of Vāmadeva's discourse. Thus addressed by Vāmadeva, king Vasumanas did as he was directed (XII, 94). How a kshatriya should act who desires to subjugate another (XII, 95). A king should never desire to subjugate the earth by unrighteous means. It was by such behaviour that Indra got the sovereignty of the world. King Pratardana, subjugating his foes in great battle, took all their wealth, including their very grain and medicinal herbs, but left their land untouched. King Divodāsa, after subjugating his foes, brought away the very remnants of their sacrificial fires, their clarified butter, and their food; for this reason he was deprived of the merit of his conquest. King Nābhāga gave away whole kingdoms with their rulers as sacrificial presents to the brahmans, excepting the wealth of learned brahmans and ascetics (XII, 96). Yudhishṭhira's condemnation of kshatriya practices. Bhīshma pointed out that by chastening the wicked, protecting the good, performing sacrifices, etc., a king cleanses himself, and ultimately obtains a residence in Indra's heaven (XII, 97). The regions of felicity acquired by heroes killed in battle: the old story of the discourse between Ambarīsha and Indra. Ambarīsha, the son of Nābhāga, having repaired to heaven, beheld his own generalissimo Sudeva in the company of Indra, and going to regions still higher. Indra explained to Ambarīsha the sacrifice of battle. "That warrior who, having slain the commander of the hostile army, mounts the vehicle of his fallen antagonist, comes to be regarded as possessed of the powers of Vishṇu and the intelligence of Bṛhaspati . . . thousands of Aps. covet him for their lord; having slain Jambha, etc. (ξ), I myself have become the chief of the celestials" (XII, 98). The old story of the battle between Pratardana and king Janaka, who cheered his troops by showing them both heaven (full of G.-girls, etc.) and hell; his warriors vanquished their foes in battle (XII, 99). How kings should lead their troops to battle. "It is proper to set the troops in motion on Caitrī or Mārgaçīrshī. Keeping Saptarshayaḥ (Ursa major) behind them, the troops should fight; the wind, the sun, and Çukra (Venus) should blow and shine from behind them; the wind is superior to the sun, the sun to Çukra. When a small number of troops is to fight with a great many, the array called Sūcīmukha should be formed" (XII, 100). How the troops should be accoutred, armed, and disposed for battle. The Gāndhāras, etc. (o), fight best with their curved knives (nakhara) and lances. The Uçīnaras are possessed of great strength and skilled in all kinds of weapons. The Prācyas are skilled in fighting from the backs of elephants and conversant with stratagems (kūṭayodhinaḥ). The Yavanas, etc. (π), are well skilled in fighting with bare arms. The Dākshiṇātyas are skilled in fighting sword in hand. Indications of courage (XII, 101). What the indications are of the future success of an army. "Çambara has said that having afflicted a foe first, forgiveness should be shown afterwards" (XII, 102). How a king should behave towards a foe that is mild, towards one that is fierce, and towards one that has many allies: the old narrative of the discourse between Bṛhaspati and Indra; Bṛhaspati recommended conciliation or lulling a foe into security; other means; a king should never slay a large number of the defeated troops, etc.; the indications of wicked persons. Indra, in subduing his foes, acted strictly according to the words of Bṛhaspati, and reduced all his enemies to subjection (XII, 103). How a righteous king deprived of his kingdom should act; the discourse between Kshemadarçin and Kālakavṛkshīya in days of old, when prince (nṛpasutaḥ) Kshemadarçin had become weak and fallen into great distress; "only a fool, deprived of former prosperity, censures the Supreme Ordainer (Dhātṛ)" (XII, 104). Continuation of the discourse; "do thou serve the Mithilā king Janaka . . .; cause thy enemy to perform the great sacrifice called viçvajit and divest him by that means of all his possessions, and cause an ascetic conversant with yoga to make thy foe desire to adopt renunciation" (XII, 105). The king's reply discountenancing deceit and fraud. Asked by Kālakavṛkshīya, the Videha king Janaka made friends with the Koçala prince Kshemadarçin, took him to Mithilā, and bestowed upon him his own daughter, etc. (XII, 106). How the king should behave towards the aristocracy (XII, 107). Important duties in brief; the relative superiority of parents and preceptors (XII, 108). Characteristics of truth and falsehood; "even a person that is disrespectable . . . may succeed in earning great merit as the hunter Balāka by slaying the blind [beast]"; Kauçika again, on the banks of the Gaṅgā, obtained great merit (sic! cf. PCR., p. 352, and Kauçika[6]); a deceitful person always wishes to betake himself to the practice of As. (PCR. amānavaṃ dharmaṃ) (XII, 109). How many creatures avoid difficulties? "they that worship with devotion the god Nārāyaṇa (Kṛshṇa), that Supreme Lord of all creatures . . . succeed in overcoming all difficulties. He is always engaged in doing what is agreeable to Arjuna, and also to Yudhishṭhira." Blessing upon the reader (XII, 110). How may good and wicked men be recognized? the old story of the discourse between a tiger and a jackal: in ancient times, in a rich city called Purikā, there was a cruel king Paurika, who was reborn as a jackal; remembering his former prosperity he became filled with grief and abstained from meat, and became compassionate and truthful, etc., and lived upon fruit that had dropped from the trees; he dwelt in a vast crematorium, his birth-place. The other jackals in vain endeavoured to make him eat carrion, promising to give him food. He consented to become the minister of a tiger, on the condition that the latter should always meet with him alone and in secret, etc. The old servants of the king (i.e. the tiger) first in vain tried to bribe him; then they secretly placed the meat intended for the king in the house of the jackal. The king ordered the jackal to be slain. The mother of the king dissuaded him ("the firmament seems to be like the solid base of a vessel, the fire-fly seems to be like the actual spark of fire; in reality, however, the sky has no base, and there is no fire in the fire-fly; there is necessity for secreting"). A righteous agent of the jackal discovered everything about the false accusation. Notwithstanding the entreaties of the king, the jackal retired to the forest, gave up his body by sitting in prāya, and proceeded to heaven (XII, 111). A king should not behave after the manner disclosed in the history of a camel: There was, in the Kṛta age, a huge camel who had recollection of all the acts of his former life; he practised severe austerities in the forest; Brahmán granted him the boon that he should have a neck so long that he could seize any food at even the end of 100 yojanas. He became idle. One day a great storm arose. The camel placed his head and a portion of his neck within the cave of a mountain; it began to pour in torrents; a jackal with his wife entered the cave for shelter and began to eat of the camel's neck, and thus the camel met with his death because of his idleness. "Manu has said that victory depends upon intelligence" (XII, 112). The old story of the discourse between the Ocean and the Rivers. The Ocean (the refuge of the foes of the gods) asked the Rivers why the latter never washed away a cane; Gaṅgā replied that the reason is that the cane bends (XII, 113). How a man of worth should behave when insulted with harsh words in an assembly (XII, 114). The qualifications of persons that may be employed by the king. "Criminal laws should be duly administered, even after the manner of Çaṅkha and Likhita" (XII, 115). Bhīshma related the story of the dog who by favour of the R. became a çarabha and was, for misconduct, retransformed into his own canine form; Bhīshma had heard the tale in the hermitage of Rāma Jāmadagnya, recited by many R.; the dog first was transformed into a leopard, then into a tiger subsisting upon the other animals of the forest (XII, 116); then into an elephant > a lion > a çarabha (having eight legs and eyes on the forehead); one day, eagerly thirsting for blood, he wished to slay the sage, who then retransformed him into a dog (XII, 117); the dog became very cheerless, and was driven by R. from his hermitage. Continuation of Bhīshma's discourse on the qualifications of servants (XII, 118). The lessons to be drawn from the story of the dog that was transformed into a çarabha (XII, 119). How a king should exercise the duty of protection; "the human body is the residence of Indra, etc. (ρ)" (XII, 120). Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Bhīshma discoursed about the origin and character of chastisement ("the foremost of all beings among D., R., P., Y., Rā., Pç., Sā., As., etc."), quoting Manu and Brahmán ("the first word": prāgvacanaṃ); some of the names of chastisement (σ); "beggars, principal judges, astrologers, performers of propitiatory and Atharvan rites, treasury, allies, grain, etc., constitute the body, composed of seven attributes and eight limbs, of a kingdom; chastisement is another powerful limb of a kingdom"; it springs from Brahmán (the creator of the universe with D., As., Rā., etc.) and the Veda; several kinds of vyavahāra; Brahmán has laid down: "neither mother nor father, nor brother, nor wife, nor priest, is unpunishable with that king who rules agreeably to his duty" (XII, 121). The discourse between the Aṅga king Vasuhoma (who was pious and, with his spouse, always practised penances) and Indra's friend king Māndhātṛ, at Muñjaprshṭha (esteemed by P. and D.-r.) on that peak of Himavat (near Meru) (yatra Muñjāvate Ramo jaṭāharaṇam ādiçat; Nīl. is silent) a favourite haunt of Rudra, where Vasuhoma came to be regarded as a D.-r. Asked by Māndhātṛ about the origin of chastisement, Vasuhoma (who knew the doctrines of Bṛhaspati and Uçanas) related: Once Brahmán, desiring to perform a sacrifice, failed to find a priest; he conceived in his brain; after 1,000 years he sneezed; the fœtus, Kshupa, fell from his head; he became a lord of creatures and a priest in the sacrifice of Brahmán. Chastisement disappeared; a great confusion set in; Brahmán repaired to Vishṇu (armed with an enormous çūla), who created his own self into the form of chastisement (having righteousness for its legs); from that form the goddess Sarasvatī created the Science of Chastisement (daṇḍanīti); after this Vishṇu (çūlavarāyudhaḥ) made Indra the ruler of D., Yama Vaivasvata of P., Kubera of treasures and Rā., Meru of the mountains, the Ocean of the rivers, Varuṇa of the waters and As., Death of life and all living things, Fire of all things possessed of energy, Mahādeva of R., Vasishṭha of the brahmans, Jātavedas of V., Sūrya of all luminous bodies, the Moon of Stars and constellations, Aṃçumat of herbs, Skanda (of twelve arms) of spirits and ghostly beings; Time of all creatures and the fourfold death (v. PCR.) and of grief and joy. Upon the completion of that sacrifice, Mahādeva made over chastisement to Vishṇu > Aṅgiras > Indra and Marīci > Bhṛgu > all R.> Lp. > Kshupa > Manu Vaivasvata (çrāddhadeva) > his sons. Chastisement remains awake, protecting all creatures, being in the hands of successive holders: Indra > Agni > Varuṇa > Prajāpati > righteousness > the son of Brahmán, i.e. Law > energy > the herbs > the mountains > the juices > Nirṛti > the planets and the luminous bodies in heaven > the Vedas > the form of Vishṇu with equine head > Brahmán > Mahādeva > Viçvedevāḥ > R. > Soma > D. > the brahmans > the kshatriyas. Several names of Mahādeva (7). Blessing upon the reader (XII, 122). Bhīshma's discourse on Virtue, Wealth, and Pleasure. The narrative of the discourse in olden times between R. Kāmanda[ka] and king Āṅgarishṭha (XII, 123). How may one acquire a virtuous behaviour? Bhīshma recited the discourse of Dhṛtarāshṭra to Duryodhana; as the latter was burning with envy at the sight of the prosperity of Yudhishṭhira and his brothers at Indraprastha and his mistakes in the palace he, accompanied by Karṇa, went to Dhṛtarāshṭra with the same question; "10,000 snātakas eat at Yudhishṭhira's palace off plates of gold; his steeds are of the Tittiri and the Kalmāsha breeds (? so PCR.; açvāṃs tittiri-kalmāshān), etc." Dhṛtarāshṭra said: "Māndhātṛ conquered the whole world in only one night, Janamejaya in the course of three, Nābhāga in seven," and he related the story of Indra's taking away from Dai. Prahlāda the latter's prosperity; Prahlāda in days of yore, by the merit of his behaviour, snatched from Indra his sovereignty and reduced the three worlds to subjection. Indra repaired for knowledge to Bṛhaspati, who caused him to repair to Bhārgava (Uçanas), who said that Prahlāda had better knowledge. Indra, in the shape of a brahman, repaired to Prahlāda, who said that he was ever obedient to the teachings of Çukra, etc. Prahlāda granted him a boon, and Indra wished him to acquire Prahlāda's nature (çīla). Prahlāda was filled with fear, but granted the boon. A flame of light issued out of his body: it was the embodiment of his nature, which was going away and entered the body of Indra. Then a similar apparition issued out: it was Righteousness; then Truth; then Good Deeds; then Might; then Prosperity, that informed him that the brahman was Çakra. Asked by Duryodhana, Dhṛtarāshṭra told him how moral conduct (çīla) might be acquired (XII, 124). The characteristics of Hope; "Duryodhana destroyed the hope I had cherished," said Yudhishṭhira. The discourse between R.-ṛ. Sumitra (of the Haihāya race) and Ṛshabha. Sumitra, when hunting, was led away by a deer that he had pierced with an arrow; he shot at it again, but in vain (XII, 125); arrived at an asylum he asked R. about Hope (XII, 126); Ṛshabha told him that he had visited Badarī, the asylum of Nara and Nārāyaṇa, where the sage Açvaçiras reads the Vedas; "having performed my ablutions in the lake and offered oblations of water to P. and D., I entered the asylum; not far from that spot I entered another retreat, where I beheld a very tall and emaciated R., Tanu, exceedingly feeble; he began to discourse in the midst of R.; a king came with his forces and ladies on a chariot drawn by fleet steeds; the name of this king was Vīradyumna; his son and only child Bhūridyumna had been missing, and Vīradyumna came there in course of his wanderings amidst the forest in pursuit of the missing one. Tanu said that a R. had been insulted by Bhūridyumna, who, asked by him for a golden jar and vegetable barks, contemptuously had refused to gratify the ascetic, who became disappointed (XII, 127). Tanu hung down his head; in former days he had been disappointed by the king, and he had practised penances for a long time, and determined to drive away hope from his mind. He then discoursed about the slenderness of Hope. Then he caused the lost prince to be brought thither, rebuked the king, and displayed himself to be the god of righteousness." Thus addressed by Ṛshabha, king Sumitra gave up his hope (XII, 128). Bhīshma cited the old narrative of the discourse between Gautama and Yama. Gautama owned a wide retreat on the Pāripātra hills; for 60,000 years he underwent ascetic austerities there. One day Lp. Yama (Dharma) came and spoke about truth, etc. (XII, 129). How may a king in great danger and distress left by his friends behave? (XII, 130).

[Rājanyamahābhāgya(m)] ("the grandeur of the kshatriyas"). § 467 (Mārk.): To the horse-sacrifice of king Ashṭaka Vaiçvāmitri all kings repaired, also his brothers Pratardana, Vasumanas, and Çibi Auçīnara. After the sacrifice was completed, these four took Nārada on their chariot and asked him who of them (as they were all blessed with long life and virtuous) should first fall from Heaven? Nārada answered that Ashṭaka should first come down, because he had praised himself for having given away thousands of kine; then Pratardana, because he, though he had given to brahmans successively the four horses yoked to his chariot, and then had drawn the chariot himself, had done so with detraction (asūyati); then Vasumanas, because he, though he had twice at the svastivācana for the sake of a flowery chariot (pushparathasya, v. 13313, see the note of PCR., p. 601) given the chariot to Nārada, because he praised it, had not done so on a third occasion; Nārada himself would come down before Çibi, because Çibi, at the request of Vidhātṛ in the disguise of a brahman, who was desirous of trying Çibi, had cooked his son Bṛhadgarbha as food for the brahman without being angry, though the brahman meanwhile had set fire to Çibi's abode and treasury and arsenal, and when the brahman ordered Çibi himself to eat his son's body Çibi was willing to do it; but the brahman said, "Thou hast conquered wrath, there is nothing that thou canst not give to the brahmans," and withdrew his hand, and then Çibi beheld his son like a child of the gods, while the brahman disappeared; and that Çibi had not done this for fame or wealth, etc., but because this is not practised by the sinful (III, 198).

[Rājasūyārambhaparvan(°va)] ("the beginning of the rājasūya sacrifice," the 22nd of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). (Cf. Rājasūyasya ārambhaḥ.)—§ 272: Yudhishṭhira consulted his counsellors, brothers, ṛtvijas, ministers, Dhaumya, Dvaipāyana, etc., as to the rājasūya ("in which ṛshis of austere vows establish six fires singing mantras of the Sāmaveda; at the conclusion thereof the performer, when installed in the sovereignty, is rewarded with the fruit of all sacrifices, including the darvīhomas"). They all encouraged him to perform it. All people lived happily under his sway and loved him (therefore he was called Ajātaçatru); Bhīma ruled over all men justly, Arjuna protected the people from enemies, Sahadeva administered justice impartially, Nakula behaved towards everybody with humility. There was no extortion, disease, etc. Yudhishṭhira sent a messenger to Kṛshṇa in Dvāravatī, and Kṛshṇa came to Indraprastha accompanied by Indrasena, and was consulted by Yudhishṭhira (II, 13). — § 273: Kṛshṇa said that Yudhishṭhira, in order to become samrāj, ought to slay the Magadha king Jarāsandha, and deliver the princes whom Jarāsandha held shut up in a mountain hole in order to sacrifice them to Mahādeva (i.e. Çiva). "The now existing kshatriyas are descended from the remnants of those who were exterminated by Rāma. They represent themselves to be the descendants of Aila and Ikshvāku; of those there are 100 families. The Bhojas, descendants of Yayāti, are great and scattered all over the earth; but now Jarāsandha, ruling the middle land (i.e. Mathurā, Nīl.), has overpowered them. His allies are (1) Çiçupāla, who has become his senāpati; (2) the Karūsha king Vakra, who fights by illusion (māyāyodhin); (3-4) Haṃsa and Ḍimbhaka (see below); (5-8) Dantavakra, Karūsha, Karabha, Meghavāhana; (9) Bhagadatta, the Yavana king, the ruler of the west, who bears on his head the most wonderful gem on earth, the old friend of thy father, and who chastises Muru and Naraka; he obeys Jarāsandha, but in his heart he is tied by affection to thee; (10) the king of Aṅga, Vaṅga, Puṇḍra, and of the Kirātas, Pauṇḍraka Vāsudeva, who among the Cedis is called Purushottama, and always bears, from foolishness, the distinctive signs of Kṛshṇa; (11) Bhīshmaka, king of the Bhojas, the friend of Indra, who governs a fourth part of the world, who by his learning has conquered the Pāṇḍyas, Krathas, and Kaiçikas, and whose brother Ākṛti is like to Rāma Jāmadagnya, has placed himself under Jarāsandha, though Kṛshṇa, etc., his relatives, are engaged every day in doing what is agreeable to him. Only Yudhishṭhira's maternal uncle, the Kunti king Purujit, who has his dominions in the west and the south, regards Yudhishṭhira with affection. The following peoples have fled for fear of Jarāsandha: (1) the eighteen tribes of the northern Bhojas have fled towards the west; (2-10) the Çūrasenas, Bhadrakāras, Bodhas, Çālvas, Paṭaccaras, Susthalas, Mukuṭṭas (B. Su°), Kulindas, and Kuntis; (11-13) the Çālvāyana kings with their brethren and followers, the southern Pāñcālas, and the eastern Koçalas, have all fled to the Kuntis (?); (14-15) the Matsyas and the Sannyastapādas (? so B.; C. Sanya°) have left their dominions in the north and fled into the southern country; (16) all the Pāñcālas have fled in all directions." Jarāsandha's relations to the Yādavas were the following: Kaṃsa, having persecuted the Yādavas, married Asti and Prāpti, daughters of Jarāsandha and sisters of Sahadeva, and began also to oppress the old chiefs of the Bhojas, who sought the help of Kṛshṇa, etc.; Kṛshṇa bestowed upon Akrūra the daughter of Āhuka, and with Saṅkarshaṇa (i.e. Balarāma) he slew Kaṃsa and Sunāman. Then Jarāsandha took up arms, and the eighteen tribes (kulair ashṭādaçāvaraiḥ (?), differently Nīl.) thought they would be unable to check him even in 300 years. His friends Haṃsa and Ḍimbhaka were incapable of being slain by weapons. Some other king, named Haṃsa (differently Nīl.), was slain by Rāma in the battle of the eighteen tribes (ashṭādaçāvare?); then Ḍimbhaka, thinking that he could not live without Haṃsa, killed himself in the Yamunā, and Haṃsa, hearing that, also jumped into the Yamunā; then Jarāsandha returned to his kingdom, and the Yādavas continued to live at Mathurā. But the widow of Kaṃsa (PCR. Haṃsa), the daughter of Jarāsandha, urging him to revenge the death of her husband, the Yādavas fled from Mathurā, and took up their abode in Kuçasthalī (i.e. Dvāravatī), adorned by Raivata, and strongly fortified the Gomanta mountains, three yojanas in length. "In the race of Kṛshṇa there are 8,000 brothers [and cousins, PCR.]. Āhuka has 100 sons. Cārudeshṇa with his brother, Cakradeva, Sātyaki, Kṛshṇa, Rauhiṇeya (i.e. Balarāma), and Çāmba (like Çauri in battle) are seven heroes (rathāḥ); Kṛtavarman, Anādhṛshṭi, Çamīka, Samitiñjaya, Kaṅka, Çaṅku, and Kunti are seven mahārathas; then there are also two sons of Andhakabhoja and himself; all these heroes, remembering the middle country, are now living among the Vṛshṇis" (II, 14).—§ 274: Yudhishṭhira had some scruples, which were opposed by Bhīma and Kṛshṇa, who cited from the Kṛta age five kings, who had become emperors (samrāj): Yauvanāçvi (i.e. Māndhātṛ) by the remission of taxes (B. jitvā jayyān, "by victories"), Bhagīratha by protection, [Arjuna-]Kārtavīrya by asceticism, Bharata by strength, and Marutta by prosperity; 100 families of kings have been unable to oppose Jarāsandha; he has already brought eighty-six kings to the house of Paçupati (i.e. Çiva); when he has fourteen more he will offer them as sacrifices (II, 15).—Some further objections of Yudhishṭhira are refuted by Arjuna (II, 16).—§ 275: The origin of Jarāsandha was the following: The Magadha king Bṛhadratha, who had three akshauhiṇīs of troops, married the two twin daughters of the king of Kāçi, making an engagement never to show a preference for either. As he was childless he repaired to the ṛshi Caṇḍa-Kauçika, the son of Kākshīvat Gautama, who was sitting under a mango-tree. He gave a mango fruit to the king, who gave it to his queens. They then brought forth each one half of a child, which were thrown away, but, found and laid together by the rākshasī Jarā, became one living child (II, 17).—Jarā had been created by Svayambhū for the destruction of the Dānavas and named Gṛhadevī (gṛhe gṛhe manushyāṇāṃ nityaṃ tishṭhāmi rākshasī, v. 730), and always lived in the king's house and did him good, because there was on the walls a likeness of her endued with youth and in the midst of children, and she was daily worshipped with scents, etc. The king ordered a great festival to be held in Magadha in honour of Jarā, and named the boy Jarāsandha (Jarayā sandhito, v. 739) (II, 18). Some time after Caṇḍa-Kauçika again came to Magadha, and foretold the greatness of Jarāsandha, that weapons should not hurt him, and that he should see Rudra. After having installed Jarāsandha, Bṛhadratha with his two wives retired to the woods and, after practising ascetic penances, ascended to heaven. When king Kaṃsa was slain by Vāsudeva (i.e. Kṛshṇa), Jarāsandha, from Girivraja, whirling a mace ninety-nine times, hurled it towards Mathurā, where Kṛshṇa was residing at that time; the mace fell at Gadāvasāna, near Mathurā, at a distance of ninety-nine yojanas [from Girivraja, PCR.]. He, with Haṃsa and Ḍimbhaka (who were skilled in the nītiçāstra, v. 765), were more than a match for the three worlds; therefore, from policy, the Kukuras, Andhakas, and Vṛshṇis, chose not to fight with him (II, 19).

Rājasūyika(ṃ) parva[n] ("the section relating to the Rājasūya sacrifice"). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 318 (parva . . . R°ṃ, i.e. Rājasūyikaparvan).

[Rājasūyikaparvan(°va)] ("the section relating to the Rājasūya sacrifice," the 25th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). (Cf. Rājasūyikaṃ parva.) § 286: Under Yudhishṭhira's rule the people were very happy, and great riches filled the treasury. Then Yudhishṭhira resolved upon the celebration of the rājasūya. Kṛshṇa came there, having appointed Ānakadundubhi to the command of the army. Then Yudhishṭhira, sitting with Dhaumya, Kṛshṇa-Dvaipāyana, his brothers, etc., asked Kṛshṇa to install himself in that sacrifice or to permit the Pāṇḍavas to be installed in it. Kṛshṇa said that Yudhishṭhira ought to perform it and employ himself (i.e. Kṛshṇa) in some office. Then Yudhishṭhira caused his minister (mantrin) Sahadeva to get the articles together that Dhaumya might order as required for the sacrifice, and to let Indrasena and Viçoka and Puru, with Arjuna for his charioteer, engage in collecting food. Dvaipāyana himself became the brahman and appointed learned brahmans as ṛtvijes; Susāman ("the bull of the Dhanañjayas") became the sāmaga, Yājñavalkya the adhvaryu, Paila (the son of Vasu) the hotṛ accompanied by Dhaumya, and their disciples and sons the hotragas (see BR.) who uttered benedictions, etc. Then Yudhishṭhira caused Sahadeva to dispatch messengers, who invited men of the four castes. Then the brahmans installed (dīkshayāñ cakrire) Yudhishṭhira in the rājasūya sacrifice, the guests arrived, the artificers erected habitations, etc. Then Yudhishṭhira despatched Nakula to Hāstinapura in order to fetch Bhīshma and Droṇa, Dhṛtarāshṭra, Vidura, Kṛpa, etc. (II, 33). Enumeration of kings who came to Yudhishṭhira's rājasūya (II, 34). — § 288: Yudhishṭhira saluted Kṛshṇa-Dvaipāyana, etc. (α), and appointed Duḥçāsana to attend to the food, etc., Açvatthāman to the brahmans, Sañjaya to the kings, Bhīshma and Droṇa to see what was done and what left undone, Kṛpa to attend to the diamonds, etc., and the dakshiṇās; Vidura became the disburser, Duryodhana the receiver of the tributes (arhaṇāni), Kṛshṇa washed the feet of the brahmans. Yudhishṭhira performed the sacrifice with six fires (II, 35).—§ 292 (cf. Çiçupālavadhaparvan): Then the sacrifice was completed, watched by Kṛshṇa. When the kings departed, the Pāṇḍavas, commanded by Yudhishṭhira, followed them to the confines of his dominions, one after another (α). Kṛshṇa asked leave to go to Dvārakā, being thanked by Yudhishṭhira for his co-operation, and having bidden farewell to Pṛthā, etc. (β), and having performed his ablutions, etc., he walked round the Garuḍa-bannered chariot, which Dāruka had fetched, and ascending it set out for Dvāravatī, followed on foot by the Pāṇḍavas, till they took leave. Now Duryodhana alone, with king Subala's son Çakuni, remained in the assembly house (II, 45).

The inhabitants were filled with joy. In order to prevent any difference between them and their cousins, Dhṛtarāshṭra caused them, with Kṛshṇa in the van, to repair to Khāṇḍavaprastha, taking half the kingdom. With Dvaipāyana's assistance they measured out a piece of land for their city, which was very beautiful, and came to be called Indraprastha. Having settled the Pāṇḍavas there, Kṛshṇa came back with Rāma to Dvāravatī (I, 207). —§ 245: When the Pāṇḍavas were dwelling in happiness at Khāṇḍavaprastha, one day the Devarshi Nārada came to them, and recommended them to make an arrangement so that disunion might not arise among them for the sake of their common wife, mentioning how Sunda and Upasunda had killed each other for the sake of Tilottamā. Yudhishṭhira asked who those Asuras were, and who this Tilottamā was (I, 208). —§ 246: Sundopasundopākhyāna (q.v.). The arrangement the Pāṇḍavas made was, that if one of them should be sitting with Draupadī, and one of the other ones should happen to see it, he would have to retire into the forest for twelve years and live as a brahmacārin. Rāma[rājy]ābhisheka ("the anointing of Rāma"). § 543: Having slain Rāvaṇa, Rāma was worshipped by D., R., and G. uttering jaya; he gave Laṅkā to Vibhīshaṇa, Avindhya came with Sītā, whom Rāma repudiated. Lakshmaṇa and the monkeys were sorrowful; Brahmán appeared on his chariot, etc. (α); Sītā swore by Mātariçvan, etc. (β), that she was innocent. A celestial voice was heard, Vāyu, etc. (γ) attested her innocence. Brahmán said that it was by his grace that Rāvaṇa (the enemy of D., G., N., Y., Dā., M.-ṛ.) had been unslayable; but Sītā had been protected by the curse of Nalakūbara. Daçaratha commanded him to take back his wife and rule his kingdom at Ayodhyā, his exile of fourteen years was over. Rāma gave boons to Avindhya and Trijaṭā. Brahmán and the gods, headed by Indra, granted Rāma adherence to virtue and invincibility, and the monkeys were restored to life. Sītā granted to Hanūmat, that his life might last as long as the fame of Rāma, and gave him celestial wines and drinks. Mātali said: "Thou hast dispelled the sorrows of D., G., Y., As., N., and men, and therefore all creatures with D., As., G., Y., Rā., and Pn. will always speak of thee." Having made arrangements for the protection of Laṅkā, Rāma, etc. (δ) recrossed the bridge riding on Pushpaka, at the seashore he dismissed the monkeys with presents, then he re-entered Kishkindhyā, where he installed Aṅgada as yuvarāja. Having reached Ayodhyā he dispatched Hanūmat as envoy to Bharata. Then he entered Nandigrāma and saw Bharata and Çatrughna, Bharata made the kingdom over to him. Vasishṭha and Vāmadeva installed him in the sovereignty under the nakshatra which belongs to Vishṇu (Vaishṇave, i.e. Çravaṇa, Nīl.). Then he dismissed Sugrīva, Vibhīshaṇa, etc., and gave Pushpaka back to Kubera. He then performed ten jārūthya horse-sacrifices on the Gomatī (III, 291).

Rāma-Rāvaṇa-yuddha ("the combat between Rāma and Rāvaṇa"). § 537: Headed by Rāvaṇa many small Rākshasas and Piçācas, viz. Parvaṇa, etc. (α), invisible penetrated among the monkeys. Vibhīshaṇa broke the spell of their invisibility, and they were all slain. Rāvaṇa with the Rākshasas and Piçācas formed the array named after Uçanas (Auçanasaṃ vyūhaṃ). Rāma disposed his troops after the rule of Bṛhaspati (Bārhaspatyaṃ vidhiṃ). Rāvaṇa fought with Rāma, etc. (β), then an encounter came about with celestial weapons of great force (III, 285).

Rāmopākhyāna[2] ("the episode relating to Rāma Jāmadagnya"). § 638*b* (Rājadh.): Jahnu > Aja > Balākāçva > Kuçika, who performed penances in order to get a son; Indra became his son:

Gādhi. — Bhṛgu.

(2) Viçvāmitra. (1) Satyavatī ~ Ṛcīka.

Jamadagni.

Paraçu-Rāma.

Ṛcīka destined a certain portion of the sacrificial food (wherein had been placed the brahman energy) for Satyavatī, which would give her a son of great wisdom, the foremost of brahmans; and another (wherein had been placed the sum total of kshatriya energy) for her mother, which would give her for a son an invincible kshatriya. Then Ṛcīka proceeded to the woods to practise penances. King Gādhi, on a tīrthayātrā, arrived at Ṛcīka's retreat with his queen. There the mother of Satyavatī, from ignorance, exchanged the two portions of the food. Ṛcīka predicted that the son of Satyavatī would become a terrible kshatriya, but asked by Satyavatī, he granted that not her son (Jamadagni) but her grandson (Paraçu-Rāma) would become such; her mother would give birth to a brahman (Viçvāmitra). Besides the other sciences, Rāma mastered the Dhanurveda; gratifying Mahādeva on Gandhamādana, he asked him for weapons, especially the axe, which made him unrivalled on earth. Meanwhile the virtuous kshatriya, the Haihaya king Arjuna Kārtavīrya, who had got 1,000 arms through the grace of Dattātreya, having subjugated the whole earth with its mountains and seven islands, became a powerful emperor, and gave away the earth to the brahmans at a horse-sacrifice. Once, solicited by Agni, he gave alms to that deity: springing from the points of his shafts, Agni burnt villages, etc., and also the retreat of Āpava (i.e. Vasishṭha, Nīl.), who cursed Arjuna, saying that Rāma should lop off his arms. Arjuna, always devoted to peace, always regardful of brahmans, etc., did not think of that curse. His sons, always haughty and cruel, seized and brought away the calf of Jamadagni's homa-cow, without the knowledge of Arjuna; Rāma lopped off the arms of Arjuna and brought back the calf; the sons of Arjuna came and slew Jamadagni, in the absence of Rāma, who vowed to free the earth of kshatriyas, and slaughtered all the sons and grandsons of Arjuna, and thousands of Haihayas, and annihilated all kshatriyas, and then, filled with compassion, retired into the woods. After some thousands of years, the grandson of Viçvāmitra and son of Raibhya, Parāvasu said to Rāma in public: "were not Pratardana, etc., who were assembled at a sacrifice at the time of Yayāti's fall, kshatriyas by birth; thou art not true of thy vow; through fear of kshatriya heroes thou hast betaken thyself to the mountains." Rāma once more slew kshatriyas by hundreds. Those kshatriyas, however, that he spared, counted by hundreds, multiplied and became mighty monarchs on earth. Rāma once more slaughtered them, not sparing the very children. Some kshatriya ladies, however, succeeded in protecting their children. Having made the earth destitute of kshatriyas twenty-one times, Rāma, at the completion of a horse-sacrifice, gave away the earth as a sacrificial present to Kaçyapa. In order to preserve the remnant of the kshatriyas, Kaçyapa told Rāma to repair to the shores of the southern ocean and not to reside within his dominion. The ocean suddenly created Çūrpāraka for Rāma. Kaçyapa gave the earth to the brahmans and then entered the great forest. Then çūdras and vaiçyas began to cohabit with the wives of brahmans; unprotected duly by kshatriyas, the earth quickly sank, and was held by Kaçyapa on his lap (ūru), whence she was called Urvī. For protection's sake she asked Kaçyapa for a king, saying that she had concealed some Haihaya kshatriyas among women; [further] Paurava (son of Vidūratha), brought up among bears in the Ṛikshavat mountain; [further] a son of Saudāsa, protected through compassion by Parāçara, and named Sarvakarman (etymology); Çibi's son Gopati, brought up in the forest among kine; Pratardana's son Vatsa, brought up among calves in a cow-pen; Dadhivāhana's grandson and Diviratha's son, concealed on the banks of Gaṅgā by Gautama; Bṛhadratha, protected by apes (? golāṅgūlaiḥ, cf. BR.; PCR.: wolves) on Gṛdhrakūṭa; many kshatriyas belonging to the race of Marutta have been brought up by the ocean; they are living among artisans and goldsmiths; "their fathers and grandfathers have been slain for my sake by Rāma; it is my duty to see that their funeral rites are duly performed." Kaçyapa, seeking out those kshatriyas, installed them duly as kings in days of yore.

Those kshatriya races that are now extant are the progeny of those princes.

Rāmopākhyānaparvan ("the episode relating to Rāma[3]," i.e. the subject-matter of the Rāmāyaṇa; it is the 48th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). (Cf. Rāmopākhyāna, Rāmāyaṇa.) § 525: As Yudhishṭhira asked Mārkaṇḍeya if he knew any one more unfortunate than he was (III, 273), Mārkaṇḍeya related the story of Rāma Dāçarathi: King Aja of Ikshvāku's race had a son Daçaratha, who had four virtuous sons: Rāma (son of Kausalyā), Lakshmaṇa and Çatrughna (sons of Sumitrā), and Bharata (son of Kaikeyī). Sītā, the daughter of the Videha king Janaka, was created by Tvashṭṛ himself to become the wife of Rāma. Prajāpati (Pitāmaha, Svayambhū, the Creator of all the worlds) had a mind-born son Pulastya, who with a cow begat a son Vaiçravaṇa (i.e. Kubera). Leaving his father, Vaiçravaṇa went to his grandfather, and angered at this, his father with half of his own self became born as Viçravas for wreaking vengeance on Vaiçravaṇa. But Pitāmaha, pleased with Vaiçravaṇa, gave him immortality and made him the sovereign of wealth (Dhaneça), a lokapāla and friend of Īçāna, and gave him a son Nalakūbara, and Laṅkā for his capital, guarded by hosts of Rākshasas, and the vimāna Pushpaka capable of going everywhere, and the kingship of the Yakshas, etc. (III, 274).—§ 526: The muni Viçravas was greatly enraged against Vaiçravaṇa. Kubera (Naravāhana), the king of the Rākshasas, always sought to please his father, and, living in Laṅkā, sent three Rākshasa women (α) skilled in singing and dancing to wait upon him. Pulastya granted them boons: to Pushpotkaṭā two sons: Kumbhakarṇa and Daçagrīva (= Rāvaṇa); Mālinī bore one son, Vibhīshaṇa; Rākā became the mother of the twins Khara and Çūrpaṇakhā. Vibhīshaṇa surpassed everybody in beauty and was very pious; Daçagrīva was energetic and strong; Kumbhakarṇa was the most powerful in battle and a master of illusion; Khara was proficient in archery and hostile to brahmans; Çūrpaṇakhā troubled the ascetics (siddhavighnakarī). Learned in the Vedas, they lived with their father on Gandhamādana. And there they beheld Vaiçravaṇa seated with their father, and seized with jealousy, they gratified Brahmán with severe penances (β), while Khara and Çūrpaṇakhā protected and attended on them. After 1,000 years Daçagrīva, cutting off his head (i.e. heads), offered it (i.e. them) in the fire, and Brahmán appeared and made them desist from their austerities, granting them boons (γ) except immortality. Now Daçagrīva defeated Kubera in battle and drove him from Laṅkā; Kubera then, followed by Gandharvas, Yakshas, Rākshasas, and Kinnaras, went to live on Gandhamādana. Rāvaṇa took from him Pushpaka, upon which Vaiçravaṇa cursed him saying: "This chariot shall never carry thee, but him who will slay thee in battle, and as thou hast insulted thy elder brother thou shalt soon die." Vibhīshaṇa followed Kubera, who invested him with the command of the Yaksha and Rākshasa hosts. On the other hand, the man-eating Rākshasas and Piçācas anointed Daçagrīva as their sovereign. Daçagrīva deprived the gods and Daityas of their valuable possessions, and because he terrified (rāvayām āsa, v. 15928) all creatures, he was called Rāvaṇa (III, 275). The Brahmarshis, Siddhas, and Devarshis, with Agni as their spokesman, sought the protection of Brahmán, who said that the four-armed Vishṇu had already been incarnate for this object, and caused Indra and the gods, Gandharvas, and Dānavas to beget strong sons, capable of assuming any form at will, on monkeys and bears; and the Gandharvī Dundubhī he caused to be born on earth as the hunchbacked Mantharā, who, instructed by Brahmán, went hither and thither ever engaged in fomenting quarrels (III, 276).—§ 527: Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Mārkaṇḍeya related: The sons of Daçaratha were conversant with the Vedas and the Dhanurveda. Rāma equalled Indra and Bṛhaspati. At night, the Pushya being in a lucky conjuncture, Rāma was to be invested as yuvarāja. Mantharā aroused the jealousy of Kaikeyī against Kausalyā, Kaikeyī prevailed upon Daçaratha that Bharata should be anointed and Rāma be in exile in the forest of Daṇḍaka for fourteen years. Rāma was accompanied by Lakshmaṇa and Sītā. Daçaratha died. Bharata rebuked Kaikeyī and set off to find Rāma, accompanied by Kausalyā, Sumitrā, Kaikeyī, Çatrughna, Vasishṭha, Vāmadeva, etc. He saw Rāma and Lakshmaṇa on the mountain Citrakūṭa, but Rāma would adhere to the order of his father. Bharata then ruled in Nandigrāma, keeping before him the shoes of Rāma.—§ 528: Rāvaṇagamana (q.v.).—§ 529: Sītāharaṇa (q.v.).—§ 530: Viçvāvasumokshaṇa (q.v.).—§ 531: Having bathed in the lake Pampā, Rāma and Lakshmaṇa on the mountain Ṛishyamūka beheld the monkey-king Sugrīva (whom his brother Vālin had deprived of his wife Tārā and his kingdom) and his four counsellors, Hanūmat (equalling Himavat), etc. Sugrīva showed Rāma a piece of cloth that had been dropped by Sītā. Sugrīva promised to bring back Sītā. Rāma installed Sugrīva as king of all the monkeys and promised to slay Vālin. Then they all repaired to Kishkindhyā. Vālin came out; Tārā (who understood the voice of every creature) told him that it was Rāma, Lakshmaṇa, Mainda, Dvivida, Hanūmat, Jāmbavat (the king of the bears), and Sugrīva who had come to destroy him. Vālin suspected Tārā. Near the mountain Mālyavat he had an encounter with Sugrīva. Hanūmat placed a garland round Sugrīva's neck (so that he shone like the mountain Malaya), and Rāma recognized Sugrīva by that sign and killed Vālin with an arrow. Sugrīva thus regained Kishkindhyā and Tārā. Rāma dwelt on Mālyavat for four months.—§ 532: Sītāsāntvana (q.v.).—§ 533: Sītā-Rāvaṇasaṃvāda (q.v.).—§ 534: Hanūmatpratyāgamana (q.v.).—§ 535: Setubandhana (q.v.).—§ 536: Laṅkāpraveça (q.v.).—§ 537: Rāma-Rāvaṇayuddha (q.v.).—§ 538: Kumbhakarṇaraṇagamana (q.v.).—§ 539: Kumbhakarṇādivadha (q.v.).—§ 540: Indrajidyuddha (q.v.).—§ 541: Indrajidvadha (q.v.).—§ 542: Rāvaṇavadha (q.v.).—§ 543: Rāmābhisheka (q.v.).—§ 544: Yudhishṭhirāçvāsa (q.v.).

Ṛshyaçṛṅga (B. Ṛçya°), a muni, son of Vibhāṇḍaka. § 11 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 443 (°sya caritraṃ, cf. § 391).—§ 270 (Brahmasabhāv.): II, 11, 440 (in the palace of Brahmán).—§ 390*d* (Tīrthayātrāp.): Ṛ., the son of Kāçyapa (i.e. Vibhāṇḍaka) born by a hind, caused Indra to rain during a drought in the territory of Lomapāda, who gave him his daughter Çāntā: III, 110, 9991.—§ 391 (do.): III, 110, 9994.—§ 391 (cf. do.). The viprarshi Vibhāṇḍaka Kāçyapa practising austerities near a great lake saw the Apsaras Urvaçī, whence his semen fell into the water and was lapped up by a hind, that was drinking. That hind was a daughter of the gods (devakanyā). Brahmán had transformed her into a hind, and when she had given birth to a muni she would be freed. She now gave birth to a son, who was named Ṛshyaçṛṅga, because there was a horn on his head. He passed his days in the forest, devoted to brahmacarya, and he had never seen any human being except his father. At that time the king of the Aṅgas, Lomapāda, a friend of Daçaratha, had been shunned by the brahmans and was without a purohita, because he had been guilty of falsehood towards a brahman and therefore Indra did not give rain in his territory. At the advice of a wise brahman he did atonement for his sins and appeased the brahmans. Thereafter he assembled his ministers in order to discuss means for bringing Ṛ. to his land. According to their counsel a courtezan with a number of women, etc., was sent to Ṛ. (III, 110). She had constructed a floating hermitage which she moored at a short distance from Vibhāṇḍaka's hermitage, and then sent her daughter, a courtezan, to Ṛshyaçṛṅga. She refused the fruits, foot-washing, etc., saying that her religious vows consisted in not receiving such things, but implied that she might embrace him. By giving him unsuitable food, garlands, beautiful garments, and drinks, and by playing and clasping him in her arms, she made him overpowered with love, and as she went away under the pretext of performing the agnihotra, he became sad. When Vibhāṇḍaka (b) returned he wondered that Ṛ. was not splitting the logs for fuel, etc., and asked who had been there (III, 111). Ṛ. said that a religious student (brahmacārin) had come to him; he had a mass of hair (jaṭilaḥ) and a pair of ornaments upon his wrist like his rosary (akshamālā); his matted hair (jaṭāḥ) was neatly tied up and adhered to the forehead and was divided in two, etc. He (Ṛ.) wished to go to him and see him every day (III, 112). Vibhāṇḍaka declared that it was a Rākshasa, and in vain spent three days in searching for this one. When Vibhāṇḍaka had gone out to collect fruits the courtezans allured Ṛ. to enter the bark, which they unmoored, and in this way they brought him to Lomapāda, who prepared a beautiful forest named Nāvyāçrama ("Floating hermitage") and kept Ṛ. in the female apartments. Suddenly rain poured down. Lomapāda gave his daughter Çāntā to Ṛ. When Vibhāṇḍaka was going to Campā in order to burn the king, the city, and his whole territory, the king let kine be placed and fields ploughed along the road, and ordered the cowherds to honour Vibhāṇḍaka with hospitality when he was fatigued and hungry, and to say that all this belonged to his son and that they were his slaves. Thus Vibhāṇḍaka was appeased. According to the command of his father Ṛ., as soon as a son had been born to him, returned to his father in the wood, and Çāntā followed and obeyed him, as Indrasenā Nārāyaṇī was ever obedient to Mudgala, etc. (III, 113): III, 110, 9999, 10000, 10006, 10007 (origin of the name), 10014, 10018, 10021, 10024 (ṛsheḥ sutaṃ); III, †10034, (†10035), (†10039), †10041, †10043, †10044, †10045; 112, (†10051); 113, †10075 (muniṃ), †10076, †10080, †10091, †10093. — § 677 (Mokshadh.): XII, 235, 8609 (Lomapādaç ca rājarshiḥ Çāntāṃ dattvā sutāṃ prabhuḥ | R°āya vipulaiḥ sarvakāmair ayujyata, all. to § 391).—§ 702 (do.): XII, 297δ*, 10874 (Kāçyapaḥ? Sabhākriyā ("building of the palace"). § 11 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 407 (Pāṇḍavānāṃ, i.e. Sabhākriyāparvan).
Sabhākriyāparvan ("the section relating to the building of the palace," the 20th of the minor parvans of the Mhbhr. Cf. Sabhākriyā). § 261: Maya said he was a great artist (mahākavi), the Viçvakarman of the Dānavas, and asked Arjuna to tell him what he was to do for him, because he had been rescued by him. Arjuna told him to do something for Kṛshṇa (lokanāthaḥ Prajāpatiḥ, v. 9), who asked him to build a palace for Yudhishṭhira. Maya was introduced to Yudhishṭhira, and recited the history of the Asura (pūrvadeva caritaṃ), i.e. of Vṛshaparvan (so Nīl.). Then on an auspicious day, after the initiatory rites, and having gratified thousands of brahmans, he measured out a piece of land 10,000 kishkus square (II, 1).—§ 262: Kṛshṇa departed for Dvārakā (v. Bhagavadyāna).—§ 263: To the north of Kailāsa, near Maināka, there is a huge mountain named Hiraṇyaçṛṅga, consisting of jewels. Near this mountain is situated the lake Bindusaras, where King Bhagīratha had dwelt for many years, desiring to behold the Gaṅgā. There the lord of all beings (i.e. Prajāpati, Nīl.) had performed 100 sacrifices, where, for the sake of embellishment, though not according to rule (dṛshṭāntataḥ), the sacrificial stakes were made of gems and the altars (caityāḥ) of gold. There the 1,000-eyed Çacīpati had become perfect (siddhiṃ gataḥ) by sacrifice. There Bhūtapati (= Mahādeva, Nīl.) took up his abode after having created all the worlds, and there he dwells, worshipped by thousands of spirits (bhūtaiḥ). There Nara and Nārāyaṇa, Brahmán, Yama, and Sthāṇu perform their sacrifices at the expiration of 1,000 yugas. There Vāsudeva has performed sattras for many years, and placed thousands and tens of thousands of sacrificial stakes adorned with golden garlands and altars of great splendour. There Maya, when the Dānavas wished to perform a sacrifice on the bank of the Bindusaras, had made utensils of gems from the house of Vṛshaparvan. That wealth, which was guarded by Yakshas and Rākshasas, he brought away, and thereof constructed the palace of Yudhishṭhira. A club with which Vṛshaparvan had slain all foes in battle, and which had been placed in Bindusaras, Maya gave to Bhīmasena; the conch-shell Devadatta, that came from Varuṇa, and was also there, he gave to Arjuna; at its sound all creatures trembled in awe. The palace surpassed the Sudharmā of Kṛshṇa and the palace of Brahmán, and covered an area of 10,000 kishkus square. Eight thousand Rākshasas, called Kiṅkaras, guarded and supported the palace. In it was a tank, whose lotuses were of dark-coloured gems, etc.; many kings mistook it for solid ground, and fell into it. The palace was constructed in seventeen months (II, 3).—§ 264: Enumeration of ṛshis (α) and kings (β) from various countries, who were present when Yudhishṭhira, after having fed 10,000 brahmans, etc., entered the palace. Also Tumburu, the friend of Dhanañjaya, and the Gandharva Citrasena with his ministers, and many other Gandharvas and Apsarases and Kinnaras came there (II, 4).
Sabhāparvan ("the section relating to the palace"), the second of the eighteen great parvans of the Mhbhr. § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 317.—§ 11 (do.): I, 2, 407, 415 (stated to contain 2,500 çlokas).—§ 795*c* (Mahābhārata): XVIII, 6, 267. Cf. Sabhā.

Sagara[1], an ancient king of Ayodhyā. § 6 (Anukram.): I, 1a*, 227 (in Sañjaya's enumeration).—§ 267 (Yamasabhāv.): II, 8, 330 (in the palace of Yama).—§ 339 (Indralokābhigamanap.): III, 47, 1897 (Kapilaḥ . . . yena pūrvaṃ mahātmānaḥ khanamānā Rasātalaṃ | darçanād eva nihatāḥ S°syātmajāḥ, all. to § 387).—§ 387 (Tīrthayātrāp.): At the request of Yudhishṭhira, Lomaça said: King S. of the family of the Ikshvākus had no sons. He subdued the Haihayas and the Tālajaṅghas. His wives were Vaidarbhī and Çaibyā. With them he on Kailāsa practised ascetic austerities in order to obtain a son, and practising yoga he succeeded in seeing Çiva, who said that owing to the muhūrta at which S. had addressed his prayers to him, one of the wives of S. would have 60,000 sons of exceeding pride, who should perish altogether, and the other wife would have one valorous son, who would perpetuate the race of S. Then Çiva disappeared and S. and his wives went home. Vaidarbhī after some time brought forth a gourd and Çaibyā a beautiful son. As S. was about to throw away the gourd, a voice from the sky told him to take out the seeds and preserve them in steaming vessels partly filled with clarified butter, as they would become 60,000 sons (III, 106). The rājarshi S. did as he was told, and provided a nurse for every receptacle. When they were born their acts were ruthless, they were able to roam about in the sky and harassed the gods, the Gandharvas, the Rākshasas, and all beings. The gods, etc., went to Brahmán, who dismissed them saying that in a short time the sons of S. would be destroyed. When after some time they were protecting S.'s sacrificial horse who roamed over the world, the horse suddenly disappeared when it had come to the waterless sea. Having told S. that the horse had been stolen, they were commanded to search for it, but they did not find it. S. then filled with wrath forbade them to return without the horse. They then began to dig the sea with spades, etc., and killed Asuras, Uragas (snakes), Rākshasas, and other beings by hundreds and thousands. After a long time they dug down to Pātāla in the north-eastern region, and seeing the horse there they ran after it without heeding Kapila ("whom they say is Vāsudeva," v. 8880), who was present there. Kapila then burnt them to ashes. Nārada told it to S., who sent for Aṃçumat, the son of his son Asamañjas, whom he had abandoned according to his duty and for the good of the citizens: III, 106, 8830, 8831 (Ikshvākūṇāṃ kule jātaḥ), 8841; 107, 8859 (rājā), 8869 (°ātmajāḥ), 8871 (do.), 8876 (do.), 8882 (°āntikaṃ).—§ 388 (Asamañjas): III, 107, 8887, 8888 (*Asamañjāḥ . . . Sainyaniryāṇa(m) ("the marching out of the troops"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 333 (i.e. Sainyaniryāṇaparvan).

[Sainyaniryāṇaparvan(°va)] ("the section relating to the marching out of the troops," the 63rd of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Sainyaniryāṇa). § 570: The Pāṇḍavas had seven akshauhiṇīs led by Drupada, etc. (a). Yudhishṭhira consulted with his brothers about the election of a generalissimo, who might also withstand Bhīshma. Sahadeva, etc., proposed Virāṭa, etc. (β). Kṛshṇa named Dhṛshṭadyumna, who was elected. Then they marched out to Kurukshetra (description), with Bhīma in the van, etc. (γ). Draupadī with her ladies, etc., remained at Upaplavya. The Kekaya princes, etc. (δ) marched behind Yudhishṭhira, keeping him in their centre. In the rear were Virāṭa, etc. (ε), 40,000 chariots, etc. Anādhṛshṭi, etc. (ζ) marched surrounding Kṛshṇa and Arjuna. Entering Kurukshetra, they blew their conches, also Kṛshṇa and Arjuna; Pāñcajanya filled them with joy (V, 152). Yudhishṭhira encamped on Kurukshetra. Kṛshṇa, etc. (η) each did some special work. At the holy Hiraṇvatī (an excellent tīrtha, with sacred water, without pointed pebbles and mire), Kṛshṇa caused a moat to be excavated. There were assembled hundreds upon hundreds of skilled mechanics in receipt of regular wages, and surgeons and physicians, etc. Then their allies began to march thither (V, 152). When Kṛshṇa had departed, Duryodhana urged Karṇa, Duḥçāsana, and Çakuni to make preparations for battle, which was fixed to commence the next morning (I, 153). At the request of Yudhishṭhira, Kṛshṇa related Duryodhana's, etc., project of imprisoning him; "neither Bhīshma nor Droṇa said anything on that subject; indeed, all of them follow Duryodhana, except Vidura. . . . War is that which should now take place." Yudhishṭhira gave order to array the troops, but then he complained that he should slay his preceptors, etc. Arjuna reminded him of what Kuntī and Vidura had said through Kṛshṇa, and Kṛshṇa affirmed it. The Pāṇḍavas and their soldiers passed the night in great happiness (V, 154). After that night had passed away, Duryodhana arranged his eleven akshauhiṇīs (description), under Kṛpa, etc. (θ) (V, 155). Referring to a contest between the brahmans, whom also the vaiçyas and the çūdras followed, and the kshatriyas among the Haihayas (b), Duryodhana urged Bhīshma to become their generalissimo. Bhīshma said that he did not see upon earth the warrior that was equal to him, except Arjuna; but Arjuna would never openly fight with him; Bhīshma said he could, in a trice, destroy the universe with D., As., Rā., and men; but the Pāṇḍavas he could not exterminate; but he would slay every day 10,000; and either Karṇa or Bhīshma should fight first. Karṇa declared he would not fight before Bhīshma was slain; then he would fight with Arjuna. Then Bhīshma was solemnly installed, under a bloody shower, etc. Then they marched out to Kurukshetra, and Duryodhana and Karṇa caused the camps to be measured out on a level part of the plain (V, 156). When Yudhishṭhira heard that Bhīshma had been installed in the command of the Kuru army, he summoned his brothers and Vāsudeva, and selected seven leaders for his seven akshauhiṇīs: Drupada, etc. (ι) (cf. a!), and above them all Dhṛshṭadyumna; and Dhanañjaya (i.e. Arjuna) of curly hair was made the leader of all those leaders; and Kṛshṇa the leader of Arjuna and driver of his steeds. Halāyudha (i.e. Balarāma), etc. (κ) came there, and Yudhishṭhira, etc. (λ) rose from their seats and offered worship to Halāyudha. Halāyudha said that a fierce slaughter was inevitable, that the Pāṇḍavas would certainly win because of the help of Kṛshṇa, that he had repeatedly tried to prevail upon Kṛshṇa to remain neuter; that he would himself do; but as he could not be without Kṛshṇa, he would repair to the tīrthas of the Sarasvatī. Then he set out for his tīrthayātrā (V, 157). About this time there came to the Pāṇḍava camp Bhīshmaka's (c) son Rukmin (d). He entered the camp with an akshauhiṇī of troops, from desire of doing what was agreeable to Vāsudeva. He offered Arjuna his assistance, if he was afraid. He would slay everyone: Droṇa, etc. (μ). Arjuna, mentioning his exploits against the G., at Khāṇḍava, against the Nivātakavacas and Kālakeyas, at Virāṭa's city, and that he had paid his respects for battle's sake to Rudra, etc. (ν), would not say he was afraid. Rukmin then went to Duryodhana, saying the same words, and was rejected in the same way. Then the Pāṇḍavas again consulted, presided over by Yudhishṭhira (V, 158). Dhṛtarāshṭra asked Sañjaya to tell him all that had happened in the matter of encamping, and complained that though he understood the defects, he could not withstand Duryodhana. Sañjaya said that he ought not to impute the fault only to Duryodhana: "as to our acts, some say that everything is ordained by God; some that they are the result of free-will; others that they are the result of those of our past lives" (V, 159).

[Sainyodyogaparvan(°va)] ("the section relating to the preparations before warfare," the 57th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). § 554: After the nuptials of Abhimanyu the Kurus, etc. (a) next morning assembled in the presence chamber of Virāṭa. Kṛshṇa spoke about the affairs of the Pāṇḍavas, and proposed to send an ambassador to Duryodhana, etc., in order to induce them to give half the kingdom to Yudhishṭhira (V, 1). Baladeva approved of it, and said that the ambassador ought to salute Bhīshma, etc. (β), that Yudhishṭhira had been wrong in challenging Çakuni, and that Duryodhana only ought to be addressed in a conciliatory tone, that war might be avoided (V, 2). Sātyaki severely blamed Baladeva, and asserted that it was Yudhishṭhira who had been challenged in the game at dice, that he could not have declined according to the rules of the Kshatriya caste, and that Çakuni had won by a trick; the Kauravas had not obeyed Bhīshma and Droṇa; they ought to be besought by sharp arrows; they could not withstand Yuyudhāna, etc. (ββ) (V, 3). Drupada approved of what had been said by Baladeva, except that Duryodhana should not be addressed mildly, and they ought also to send messengers to Çalya, etc. (γ) to collect an army; his own purohita ought to be sent to Dhṛtarāshṭra, Duryodhana, Bhīshma, and Droṇa (V, 4). Having approved of Drupada's words, Kṛshṇa set out for Dvārakā, and the Pāṇḍavas and the Dhārtarāshṭras began to make preparations for war, and collect troops; and Drupada despatched his purohita to the Kurus (V, 5). Drupada gave instructions to his purohita (cf. Pushya, § 554), who set out for Hāstinapura with a following of disciples (V, 6). After Kṛshṇa, etc. (γγ) had set out for Dvārakā, Arjuna and Duryodhana come thither, while Kṛshṇa was asleep; Duryodhana sat down at the head of the bed; after him Arjuna came and stood at the back of the bed. And when Kṛshṇa awoke, he first saw Arjuna. Arjuna chose for his partner Kṛshṇa himself, who was not to fight; Duryodhana selected for himself Kṛshṇa's ten crores of Nārāyaṇa cowherds. Balarāma said he would fight neither for Kuntī's sons nor for Duryodhana. Kṛtavarman gave an akshauhiṇī to Duryodhana. Kṛshṇa promised to become Arjuna's charioteer; Arjuna came back to Yudhishṭhira with Kṛshṇa and the flower of the Daçārha race (V, 7).—§ 555: Çalya with his sons and troops (description) was advancing in order to join the Pāṇḍavas; but Duryodhana caused fine palaces of entertainment to be constructed at different spots for his reception; Çalya first thought this had been arranged by Yudhishṭhira, until Duryodhana came forward and showed himself; then he promised Duryodhana to become the leader of his army. Çalya, however, first proceeded to the Pāṇḍavas at Upaplavya, and told them about the matter. He promised Yudhishṭhira that when he became Karṇa's charioteer he would act so that Karṇa might be dispirited; and in order to comfort Yudhishṭhira he reminded him that Çakra (Indra) had to endure, together with his wife, very great misery (V, 8). At the request of Yudhishṭhira, Çalya related the ancient story (itihāsaṃ purātanaṃ) of the great misery endured by Indra and his queen (v. Indravijaya) (V, 9–17). So Yudhishṭhira should also regain his kingdom. This story of the victory of Indra, equal to the Veda, should be listened to by a king desirous of victory; he who reads it with a heart full of religious faith is purified from his sins, etc. Çalya repeated his promise to damp the spirits of Karṇa, and went with his army to Duryodhana (V, 18). Yuyudhāna, etc. (γ) came to Yudhishṭhira with troops (description). For the Pāṇḍavas there were thus assembled seven akshauhiṇīs of troops from various directions. In the same way king Bhagadatta (with an akshauhiṇī crowded with Cīnas and Kirātas), etc. (δ) came to the Dhārtarāshṭras. And thus Duryodhana had a force which numbered eleven akshauhiṇīs, so that there was no room for them in the city of Hāstinapura; but the Pañcanada, the whole Kurujāṅgala, etc. (ε), full of abundant corn and wealth, was entirely overspread with the army of the Kauravas. And this army was beheld by the purohita who had been sent by the Pāñcāla king to the Kurus (V, 19).

Saṃçaptakanihantṛ ("the slayer of the Saṃçaptakas") = Arjuna: XIV, 2229.

Saṃçaptakanis(h)ūdana ("the destroyer of the Saṃçaptakas") = Arjuna: XIV, 2172.

Saṃçaptakavadha(ḥ) (C. °sa°) ("the slaughter of the Saṃçaptakas"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 338 (i.e. Saṃçaptakavadhaparvan).

[Saṃçaptakavadhaparvan(°va)] ("the section relating to the slaughter of the Saṃçaptakas," the 72nd of the minor parvans of the Mhbhr.; cf. Saṃçaptakavadha). § 591: Droṇa confessed his inability to seize Yudhishṭhira if Arjuna were by. The Trigarta king said that Arjuna had always injured them, and took an oath that either Arjuna or the Trigartas should be slain. This oath was taken by the five brothers Satyaratha, etc., (α) with their 10,000 chariots, and by the Mālava king, etc. (β). Then they summoned Arjuna towards the southern part of the field. Arjuna told Satyajit to guard Yudhishṭhira, and went out against the Trigartas (VII, 17).—§ 592: THE TWELFTH DAY'S BATTLE. The Saṃçaptakas rejoiced at the prospect of fighting Arjuna, who addressed Kṛshṇa about this ill-timed joy, and terrified them with the sound of Devadatta, and attacked them. Subāhu & Arjuna; Suçarman, etc. (α) & Arjuna; they fled to Duryodhana; but urged by the Trigarta king, they once more returned to the field with the Nārāyaṇa cowherds (VII, 18). Kṛshṇa conveyed Arjuna to the Saṃçaptakas. The Nārāyaṇas & Arjuna (+ Kṛshṇa); Arjuna blew Devadatta and employed the Tvāshṭra weapon, that confounded the foes, who began to fight each other; Arjuna crushed the Lalitthas, etc. (β), and with the Vāyavya weapon he dispersed the arrows shot by his foes, and Vāyu blew away crowds of Saṃçaptakas with their steeds, etc. Meanwhile Droṇa attacked Yudhishṭhira (VII, 19). Droṇa had arrayed his troops in the shape of a garuḍa: Droṇa in the mouth; Duryodhana and his brothers = the head; Kṛtavarman and Kṛpa = the two eyes; Bhūtaçarman, etc. (γ), in its neck; Bhūriçravas, etc. (δ), in the right wing; Vinda, etc. (ε), in the left wing before Açvatthāman; in the back the Kaliṅgas, etc. (ζ); in the tail Karṇa with his sons, etc.; Jayadratha, etc. (η), in the bosom; in the midst the Prāgjyotisha king. Yudhishṭhira disposed his troops in the shape of a semicircle. Dhṛshṭadyumna & Droṇa + Durmukha Dhārtarāshṭra; Droṇa dispersed Yudhishṭhira's host (VII, 20). Droṇa & Yudhishṭhira + Satyajit + Vṛka; Satyajit was slain by Droṇa; Yudhishṭhira fled. The Pāñcālas, etc. (θ), attacked Droṇa, and were consumed; Çatānīka (younger brother of the Matsya king) & Droṇa, who slew him; the Matsyas fled. Droṇa defeated the Cedis, etc. (ι). Yudhishṭhira & Droṇa; Çikhaṇḍin, etc. (κ), & Droṇa; Droṇa slew Kshema. Yudhishṭhira fled away. Droṇa slew Pāñcālya (Pāñcālyanāmnā, Nīl.). Droṇa crushed the Pāñcālas, etc. (λ), and, supported by the Kurus, he vanquished Sātyaki, etc. (μ). The Pāṇḍavas fled away in all directions (VII, 21). Duryodhana addressed Karṇa in joy, beholding the Pāñcālas, etc. (ν), broken by Droṇa, and Bhīmasena abandoned by the Pāṇḍavas and the Sṛñjayas. Karṇa said that Bhīmasena, followed by Sātyaki, etc. (ξ), would never leave the fight; Duryodhana proceeded to Droṇa's chariot, where a deafening noise was heard of Pāṇḍava warriors returning to the fight (VII, 22). At the request of Dhṛtarāshṭra, Sañjaya described the steeds of Bhīmasena, etc. (o), especially mentioning Bṛhanta (b); the standards of Droṇa, etc. (π), and the bows of Yudhishṭhira, etc. (ρ) (VII, 23). The despondency of Dhṛtarāshṭra, mentioning Bhīma, etc. (σ) (VII, 24). When the Pāṇḍavas returned to fight and attacked Droṇa, the Kurus were afraid. Duryodhana urged his troops against them. Durmarshaṇa Dhārtarāshṭra & Bhīma; Kṛtavarman & Yuyudhāna; the Sindhu king & Kshatravarman; Subāhu & Yuyutsu, who cut off the two arms of Subāhu; Çalya & Yudhishṭhira; Bāhlīka & Drupada; Vinda and Anuvinda & Virāṭa; that encounter between the Matsyas and the Kekayas resembled that between D. and As. in days of old; Bhūtakarman Sabhāpati & Nakula's son Çatānīka; Bhūtakarman was slain by Çatānīka; Viviṃçati & Sutasoma; Bhīmaratha (Dhārtarāshṭra) slew Çālva; Citrasena's son & Çrutakarman; Prativindhya & Açvatthāman; the son of Duḥçāsana & Çrutakīrti (the son of Arjuna by Draupadī); Lakshmaṇa (son of Duryodhana) & Paṭaccarahantṛ; Vikarṇa (Dhārtarāshṭra) & Çikhaṇḍin; Aṅgada & Uttamaujas; Durmukha & Purujit; Karṇa & the five Kekaya brothers; Durjaya + Jaya + Vijaya (Dhārtarāshṭrāḥ) & Nīla + the Kāçi king + Jayatsena; Kshemadhūrti + Bṛhanta & Sātyaki; the Cedi king & Ambashṭha; Kṛpa & Vārdhakshemi; Somadatta's son & Maṇimat; Vṛshasena (the son of Karṇa) & Pāṇḍya; Ghaṭotkaca & Alambusha (VII, 25); Duryodhana & Bhīmasena; the Aṅga king (Mlecchа king) & do.; Bhīma slew him, and his divisions fled; the Prāgjyotisha king (upon his elephant Supratīka) & Bhīma (who knew the añjalikāvedha); Bhīma escaped from the elephant, but was supposed to have been slain; Yudhishṭhira (+ the Pāñcālas) & Bhagadatta (upon Supratīka); the Daçārṇa king (upon his elephant) & Bhagadatta; Bhagadatta & Yuyudhāna; Bhagadatta destroyed the Pāṇḍava troops; Bhīma & Bhagadatta, whose elephant frightened Bhīma's steeds, that bore Bhīma away; Ruciparvan (Kṛtī-sutaḥ) & Bhagadatta, who slew him; Abhimanyu, etc. (τ), & Bhagadatta's elephant; Yuyutsu had his steeds and charioteer trod down and fled; Duryodhana (?) & Abhimanyu; Arjuna, etc. (υ) & Bhagadatta; the Pāṇḍava troops fled (VII, 26). Urged by Arjuna, Kṛshṇa began to proceed against Bhagadatta; the Saṃçaptakas (10,000 Trigartas and 4,000 Nārāyaṇāḥ (Vāsudevasyānugāḥ)) challenged Arjuna, and he encountered them, shot the Brāhma weapon, defeated and slew them, and then turned against Bhagadatta (VII, 27); but as Suçarman with his brothers followed him from behind, he again attacked Suçarman, and then again Bhagadatta (VII, 28); Bhagadatta, at last, by means of mantras changed his hook into the Vaishṇava weapon, which, received by Kṛshṇa on his breast, became a garland. As Arjuna taxed Kṛshṇa for his taking part in the battle, Kṛshṇa related the history of the Vaishṇavāstra (c). "The great Asura has now been divested of that supreme weapon; now slay Bhagadatta, that enemy of the gods, even as I formerly for the benefit of the worlds slew the Asura Naraka." Arjuna then slew both Bhagadatta (who was ever the favourite and friend of Indra, v. 1302), and the elephant (VII, 29). Then Arjuna slew the two brothers Vṛsha[ka] and Acala (sons of the Gāndhāra king Subala). Dhṛtarāshṭra's sons attacked Arjuna, and Çakuni created illusions in order to confound him and Kṛshṇa: clubs, etc., and asses, etc., which Arjuna slew with celestial weapons; then darkness, whence proceeded harsh voices; this Arjuna dispelled with the weapon Jyotishka; then waves of water, dried up with the Āditya weapon; Çakuni fled. Arjuna slaughtered the Kuru army: one stream proceeded towards Droṇa, one towards Duryodhana; a fierce battle took place on the southern side between Arjuna and the Kurus. The various divisions of Yudhishṭhira's force smote the foe on every part of the field (VII, 30). Droṇa + the Kurus & Yudhishṭhira, etc. (φ), + the Pāṇḍavas; Nīla & Açvatthāman, who slew him; the Pāṇḍavas regretted that Arjuna was engaged in the southern part of the field in slaughtering the Saṃçaptakas and the Nārāyaṇa force (VII, 31). Bhīmasena & Bāhlīka + Karṇa; Droṇa, etc. (χ) & Bhīma; Yudhishṭhira despatched Nakula, etc. (ψ), to the rescue of Bhīma; Bhīma, etc., & Droṇa; the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ω) & Droṇa, etc. (aa). Arjuna, having slain the Saṃçaptakas, & Droṇa + the Kurus + Arjuna, who employed the Āgneya weapon; Dhṛshṭadyumna, etc. (ββ) & Karṇa; Arjuna slew three of Karṇa's brothers (γγ); Bhīma slew fifteen of Karṇa's combatants; Dhṛshṭadyumna slew Candravarman, etc. (δδ); Duryodhana, etc. (εε) & Sātyaki, rescuing Karṇa; Dhṛshṭadyumna, etc. (ζζ) protected Sātyaki. At sunset the armies retired (VII, 32).

[Saṃvar(t)ta-Maruttīya] ("the tale of Saṃvartta and Marutta"): § 778*b* (Açvamedh.). Vyāsa said: In the Kṛta age Manu was the ruler; > Prasandhi > Kshupa > Ikshvāku > Viṃça (the model bowman, the eldest of 100 brothers, all kings) > Viviṃça > Khanīnetra (c) > Suvarcas (d) Karandhama > Avikshit (e) Kārandhama > Marutta (who surpassed his father, had the strength of 10,000 elephants, and was equal to Vishṇu). Desirous of performing a sacrifice, Marutta, coming to Meru, on the northern side of Himavat, caused thousands of gold vessels to be forged; there on a huge golden hill he performed the rites along with other princes (XIV, 4). Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Vyāsa said: As the offspring of Prajāpati Daksha, D. and As., challenged each other, so did Aṅgiras' sons Bṛhaspati and Saṃvarta; troubled by his elder brother Saṃvarta went naked to the woods. Indra, having vanquished the As., appointed Bṛh. as his priest. Formerly (read pūrvaṃ with B.) Aṅgiras was the family priest of king Karandhama (see d); so also of his son Avikshit (equal to Yayāti). His son Marutta used to defy Indra, and Indra used to defy Marutta, but could not prevail over him. Then Indra took the promise from Bṛh. that he would not perform priestly offices for Marutta ("thou hast destroyed Namuci, Viçvarūpa, and Bala," said Bṛh.). Vaiçampāyana said: Then Indra was cured for his envy and went home (XIV, 5). Vyāsa said: The ancient tale of the discourse between Bṛh. and Marutta is cited in this connection. Marutta in vain tried to persuade Bṛh. to officiate at his sacrifice (which Bṛh. had himself formerly proposed); D.-ṛ. (M.-ṛ.) Nārada told him to apply to Saṃvarta, who now, desirous of seeing Maheçvara, wandered about in Vārāṇasī in the garb of a madman; "having reached the gate of that city, thou must place a dead body somewhere near it, and the man who shall turn away on seeing the corpse, do thou know that man to be Saṃvarta; if he should ask thee to follow me," said Nārada, "thou mayst even tell him without hesitation that I have ascended the pyre." Vyāsa said: "By acting thus, Marutta found Saṃvarta in a lonely place; Saṃvarta covered him with mud and ashes and phlegm and spittle. At last he sat down under a nyagrodha tree" (XIV, 6). Marutta told him the matter (also that Nārada had mounted the pyre); Saṃvarta then, as a lunatic, scolding Marutta repeatedly with harsh words, told him to go to Bṛh. first (as his elder brother), and taking Bṛh.'s permission he might come back. As Marutta said that he had already been repulsed by Bṛh., and that he now desired to sacrifice even with all his goods in order to outstrip Indra, Saṃvarta consented, if Marutta would agree to do all that Saṃvarta would ask him to do, as Bṛh. and Indra were certain to do all they could to injure Marutta. Marutta took an oath to this. Saṃvarta said that Marutta would surpass Indra, D., and G.; he himself had no desire for wealth, but would only do what was disagreeable to Indra and Bṛh. (XIV, 7). Saṃvarta said: There is a peak Muñjavat (f) on the Himālaya, where Çiva is constantly engaged in austerities; go thither and appease Çiva, whose names are Çarva, etc. (a); then thou shalt acquire that gold. Marutta acted accordingly; Bṛh. became sick from envy; Indra with D. came (XIV, 8) and was told about the matter ("prosperity of a rival is always painful, and for this reason thou with D. persecutest As. and kills them"). He despatched Agni (g) to Marutta, asking him to let Bṛh. officiate as his priest instead of Saṃvarta, promising him the greatest rewards ("such as the highest regions created by Prajāpati and even the whole kingdom of the gods"); Saṃvarta threatened to burn Agni with his fearful eye, if he ever came again on such an errand. Agni was frightened and returned to Indra and Bṛh. and said that Marutta had refused and did not care for his promises. Indra asked Agni to return to Marutta, and threatened him with Indra's thunderbolt if he did not obey; Agni, afraid of Saṃvarta, suggested that the G. king should go; Indra said that nobody could burn Agni; Agni asked why then Vṛtra could deprive Indra of the sovereignty of Heaven; Indra, mentioning his victories over the Kālakeyas, Dā., and Prahlāda, said that it was because he did not accept soma from a foe, nor strike the weak with his thunderbolt; Agni reminded him of Cyavana at Çaryāti's sacrifice and the creation of Mada (description): "the might of brahmans is greater than that of kshatriyas" (XIV, 9). Then Indra sent G. Dhṛtarāshṭra on the same errand, but in vain. Vyāsa said: As the clouds indicated that Indra must be near, Marutta repaired to Saṃvarta, who comforted him, saying that Agni would protect him, and that he would himself dispel the thunder by the winds, and granted him the boon that Indra should come in person to his sacrifice and accept the oblations offered to him, and so should all the gods. And so it happened by the power of Saṃvarta's incantations. Requested by Saṃvarta, Indra himself gave directions to all the gods to erect a hall of assembly: 1,000 well-furnished rooms with a durable staircase for the ascent of G. and Aps., and to furnish that portion of the sacrificial ground reserved for the dance of Aps., like unto the palace of Indra in heaven; Indra said that Marutta's ancestors and the gods had been highly pleased, and told him to offer a red bull to Agni, and a blue bull with a variegated skin to V.-D. Then Indra and the gods returned home. Marutta placed heaps of gold on various spots and distributed immense wealth to the brahmans.

[Sañjayayānaparvan(°va)] ("the section relating to the mission of Sañjaya," the 58th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Sañjayayāna). § 556: Drupada's purohita was honoured by Dhṛtarāshṭra, Bhīshma, and Vidura. He mentioned the eternal duties of kings; the Pāṇḍavas had not obtained their share of the paternal wealth; the murderous contrivances of the Dhārtarāshṭras; the deceitful game; the indignities in the council-hall; the exile for thirteen years; the Pāṇḍavas desired nothing but a peaceful settlement; the Pāṇḍavas were more powerful; men like Sātyaki, Bhīmasena, and the twins were equal in might to 1,000 akshauhiṇīs; Arjuna and Kṛshṇa nobody could fight (V, 20). Bhīshma approved of his speech; but Karṇa wrathfully interrupted him. Dhṛtarāshṭra pacified Bhīshma, rebuked Karṇa, sent Drupada's purohita back to the Pāṇḍavas, and summoned Sañjaya to the council-hall (V, 21). Dhṛtarāshṭra gave instructions to Sañjaya, praising the Pāṇḍavas (a) and Kṛshṇa and some of their adherents (β), mentioning the killing of Çiçupāla (b), blaming Duryodhana and Karṇa, and ordered him to go to Upaplavya to salute them and the five sons of Draupadī, and tell them that Dhṛtarāshṭra was desirous of peace with the Pāṇḍavas (V, 22). Sañjaya came to Upaplavya and saluted Yudhishṭhira and enquired about Bhīmasena, etc. (γ). Yudhishṭhira inquired about Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc. (δ), and mentioned the prowess of Arjuna (c), Sahadeva (d), Nakula (e), and the Ghoshayātrā (V, 23). Sañjaya delivered his message and answered Yudhishṭhira's questions (V, 24). In the presence of the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ε), Sañjaya greeted Yudhishṭhira, etc. (ζ), and recommended peace, "for what, in sooth, is life after having killed all your kinsfolk?"; he mentioned Kṛshṇa, etc. (η) on the side of the Pāṇḍavas, and Droṇa, etc. (θ), on the side of the Kauravas (V, 25). Yudhishṭhira said that peace was preferable to war, but complained that Duryodhana had disregarded the words of Vidura, and Dhṛtarāshṭra had been desirous solely of satisfying his sons; that Duryodhana's counsellors were now Duḥçāsana, Çakuni, and Karṇa. He compared Arjuna, Bhīma, Nakula, and Sahadeva with Karṇa and Duryodhana. He claimed Indraprastha for his kingdom (V, 26). Sañjaya declared that if, without war, the Kurus would not yield his share to Yudhishṭhira, then it would be far better for him to live upon alms in the kingdom of the Andhakas and the Vṛshṇis than to obtain sovereignty by war (V, 27). Yudhishṭhira said that virtue and vice, which are both eternal and absolute, exchange their aspects during seasons of distress; he would not seek even what belongs to Prajāpati, or heaven, or Brahmaloka (Prājāpatyaṃ tridivaṃ Brahmalokaṃ) by unrighteous means; but he would be guided by Kṛshṇa, as did Sātyaki, etc. (ι); Kṛshṇa was the great judge of the propriety or otherwise of all acts (V, 28). Kṛshṇa said he wished prosperity for both the Pāṇḍavas and Dhṛtarāshṭra; therefore he desired peace; but when Dhṛtarāshṭra and his sons were so covetous, war was inevitable; "some say that work should be shunned and that salvation is attainable by knowledge; but the brahmans know this, that though one may have a knowledge of eatable things, yet the hunger will not be appeased unless one actually eats; such branches of knowledge as are of use in doing works bear fruit, but not the other ones. In the other world it is by virtue of work that the gods, etc. (κ) flourish. Yudhishṭhira is constantly engaged in the study of the Veda; he is bent on the horse-sacrifice and the rājasūya; he rides horses and elephants, etc.; if the Pāṇḍavas could see a course of action not involving the slaughter of the sons of Kuru, they would adopt it. But we must take into consideration the division into four castes and the respective duties allotted to each (specification). War and weapons were invented by Indra for putting the Dasyus to death." Kṛshṇa alluded to the game and the role of Çakuni there, to the indignities undergone by Kṛshṇā from Duḥçāsana and Karṇa, while the Kurus with Bhīshma at their head did not interfere, and only Vidura took her part; and that Duḥçāsana had called the Pāṇḍaras eunuchs at their departure. He would go in person to the Kurus. He compared the evil passions of Duryodhana, etc. (λ), with the righteousness of Yudhishṭhira, etc. (μ). "King Dhṛtarāshṭra with his sons constitute a forest, while the Pāṇḍavas are its tigers; do not cut down the forest with its tigers, and let not the tigers be driven away from the forest; the tiger out of the wood is easily slain; the wood also that is without a tiger is easily cut down." Similarly the Dhārtarāshṭras are as creepers, the Pāṇḍavas are Çāla-trees, and the creepers cannot dispense with a large tree round which it can twine (V, 29). Sañjaya then bade farewell to Yudhishṭhira, etc. (ν). Yudhishṭhira spoke approvingly of Sañjaya's agreeable speech and excellent conduct as an ambassador, and compared him to Vidura, and declared him to be as dear to them as Dhanañjaya (i.e. Arjuna). He recommended the brahmans to him, and told him to salute Droṇa, etc. (ξ), and the aged, middle-aged, and young ladies, "the daughters of our house," and the maidservants and manservants, and the many humpbacked and lame ones among them, and those that were defective in limb, or imbecile, and the dwarfs to whom Dhṛtarāshṭra gave food and raiment from motives of humanity, the blind, the aged, the many that had the use only of their hands, being destitute of legs, the masterless and weak, those that vainly strived to earn a living, the ignorant, in fact, all those that were in pitiable circumstances, all the ambassadors arrived from all sides, etc. He concluded with this message to Duryodhana: "give me back my own Indraprastha (Çakrapurīṃ), or fight with me" (V, 30). Yudhishṭhira said that the Creator (Dhātṛ) gives and takes according to his will. He told Sañjaya especially to salute Dhṛtarāshṭra, Bhīshma, and Vidura, and recommend the Pāṇḍavas to them, that they might counsel peace; and to say to Duryodhana that the Pāṇḍavas were willing to forgive his insults to Draupadī (Kṛshṇā) and Duḥçāsana's dragging her, disregarding Kuntī; but they must have their proper share of the kingdom; "give us even a single province of the empire; give us even Kuçasthala (B. Avi°), Vṛkasthala, Mākandī, Vāraṇāvata, and in the fifth place any other village that thou likest; even this will end the quarrel." He said that to see the Kurus and the Pāñçālas live happily united was what he desired (V, 31). Having returned to Hāstinapura, Sañjaya addressed Dhṛtarāshṭra at night; he praised Yudhishṭhira, "who shines in his natural perfection, leaving his load of sins to be borne by thee," while Dhṛtarāshṭra's acts were contrary to both religion and profit. In delivering the message from Yudhishṭhira he did not mention the alternative of giving them the five villages. He alluded to Arjuna's ascending to the very heavens and being honoured there. King Bali, not finding a primary cause (pāraṃ), regarded time (kālaḥ) to be the cause of everything. "To-morrow morning the Kurus, assembled together in the council-hall, will hear the words of Ajātaçatru (i.e. Yudhishṭhira)" (V, 32).

Saptasārasvata, a tīrtha on the Sarasvatī. § 365 (Maṅkaṇaka): III, 85, 6085 (there Maṅkaṇaka won ascetic success), 7003.—§ 615 (Baladevatīrthayātrā): IX, 37, 2184 (tīrthaṃ, visited by Balarāma); 38, 2186 (tīrthaṃ).—§ 615*i* (do.): The seven Sarasvatīs cover this universe. Whithersoever the Sarasvatī was summoned, thither she made her appearance. Her seven forms are Suprabhā, etc. (a). I) Pitāmaha [i.e. Brahmán] was once performing a sacrifice at Pushkara; whatever he thought of, immediately appeared, the Gandharvas sung, the Apsarases danced. The ṛshis missed Sarasvatī, Brahmán thought of her and she appeared there at Pushkara under the name of Suprabhā. II) At Naimisha many munis were assembled, performing sacrifices and talking about the Vedas, they thought of Sarasvatī, who made her appearance and came to be called Kāñcanākshī. III) Similarly she came to the sacrifice of Gaya in the country of the Gayas (Gayeshu), where she flowed from the slopes of Himavat and was called Viçālā. IV) At the sacrifice of Auddālaki in the northern part of Kosalā (uttare Koçalābhāge), having been previously thought of by Uddālaka when sacrificing, she was mentally called Manoramā by the ṛshis. V) At Kuru's sacrifice at Kurukshetra, she was summoned by Vasishṭha, and named Oghavatī. VI) At Daksha's sacrifice at Gaṅgādvāra she appeared under the name of Sureṇu (see the note of PCR. pag. 154). VII) At Brahmán's sacrifice on the Himavat, as Vimalodā. All these seven forms then came and mingled together in the tīrtha, which from this is known by the name of Saptasārasvata. "Thus I have told thee of the seven Sarasvatīs by their names and of the tīrtha S.; listen now to a great feat of Maṅkaṇaka": IX, 38, 2216, 2217.—§ 615*j* (Maṅkaṇaka): IX, 38, 2243 (there Maṅkaṇaka dwelt, from his seed which fell in the Sarasvatī seven ṛshis were born; the ascetic success of Maṅkaṇaka, cf. § 365).

Sārasa, a Suparṇa, son of Garuḍa. § 564 (Mātalīyop.): V, 101β*, 3596.

Sārasvata, a ṛshi, son of Dadhīca and Sarasvatī. § 368 (Tīrthayātrāp.): III, 83, 7058 (yatra—i.e. in Dadhīca's tīrtha—S°o yātaḥ [read jātaḥ with PCR.] so 'ṅgirās tapaso nidhiḥ, cf. § 615*gg*).—§ 371 (Tuṅgaka): III, 85, 8189 (Aṅgirasaḥ sutaḥ, when the Vedas had been lost, S. taught them to the ascetics, cf. § 615*gg*).—§ 615 (Baladevatīrthayātrā): IX, 51, 2926 (°sya munes tīrthaṃ), 2927 (muniḥ, during a drought of twelve years he taught the Vedas to the brahmans), 2928 (muniḥ).—§ 615*gg* (do.): In days of yore the muni Dadhīca, living as a brahmacārin, had by his austerities afflicted Indra with fear. As he could not be turned away even by diverse kinds of rewards, Indra despatched to him the Apsaras Alambushā on the banks of the Sarasvatī. At the sight of her his seed fell into the Sarasvatī, the river held it in her womb and brought forth a son whom she brought to the ṛshis, who granted her a boon, saying that the Viçvadevas, the ṛshis, the Gandharvas, and the Apsarases would henceforth derive great happiness when oblations of her water were presented to them, and praised her as having sprung from the lake of Brahmán, etc., and said that the child should be named S., and during a drought of twelve years teach the Vedas to many brahmans, and that she should become the foremost of all sacred rivers. The river took the child with her. Meanwhile, on the occasion of a war between the gods and the Dānavas, Indra wandered through the three worlds in search of weapons, but failed to find such weapons as were fit to slay the enemies of the gods, until Dadhīca (hh), solicited by the gods, gave up his life (and obtained many regions of inexhaustible merit) and Indra from his bones caused many kinds of weapons (thunderbolts, discs, maces, clubs, and bludgeons) to be made. With the thunderbolt born of Brāhma energy and inspired with mantras, Indra made a loud noise when he hurled it and slew ninety-nine heroes among the Daityas. After a long time a twelve years' drought occurred, and the ṛshis fled away; only S. was retained by the Sarasvatī, who supplied him with food, giving him large fishes, and he offered oblations to the ṛshis and the gods. While wandering with famished stomachs, the ṛshis had lost the knowledge of the Vedas and solicited one another to lecture on the Vedas. Then they learnt them from S., becoming his disciples, 60,000 in number, though he was but a boy: IX, 51, 2945, 2946, 2947, 2962, 2967, 2968, 2970 (muniçreshṭhaṃ), 2976 (viprarsheḥ).

Sarpasattra(m) ("the snake-sacrifice"). — § 58 b (cf. Āstīkap. and Janam.). Compelled by the mantras innumerable snakes fell into the fire (I, 52).—§ 59: Caṇḍabhārgava (of the race of Cyavana) was the hotṛ at the snake sacrifice, the old Kautsa (Jaimini) the udgātṛ, Çārṅgarava (C. Sāṅgarava) the brahman, and Piṅgala the adhvaryu. Vyāsa, etc. (a), were the Sadasyas.—§ 60: Takshaka repaired to Indra, who comforted him saying: "Brahmán was pacified by me for thy sake." Vāsuki summoned his sister (I, 53), who told the matter to Āstīka; Āstīka comforted Vāsuki and went to the Snake-Sacrifice, but was not at first admitted by the door-keepers, wherefore he gratified them; then he began to adore the king, etc. (I, 54).—§ 61: Comparing his sacrifice to Soma's, Varuṇa's, and Prajāpati's in Prayāga of old, and to Indra's, etc. (a), he praised Janamejaya's protection of his subjects, and his abstinence, and said that he was either Varuṇa or Yama, and compared him with Indra, Khaṭvāṅga (a king, BR.; = Çiva?), etc. (β) (I, 55).—§ 62: Janamejaya was inclined to confer a boon on Āstīka; but the hotṛ declared that Takshaka was not yet burnt, and the ṛtvij'es declared from the çāstras, and the Sūta Lohitāksha (v. § 58) confirmed it from the Purāṇas, that Takshaka was now hiding in the dwelling of Indra. As the hotṛ with mantras began to pour clarified butter into the fire, Indra appeared in his vimāna with the gods, Vidyādharas and Apsarases, and Takshaka hid himself in the upper garment of Indra. Janamejaya ordered to throw Indra himself into the fire together with Takshaka. Shaking off Takshaka, Indra quickly returned to his own abode. Takshaka was now falling from heaven, and Janamejaya promised to grant to Āstīka what he might desire. Āstīka said: "Let no more snakes fall into the fire," and refused to ask for any other boon (I, 56).—§ 63: Enumeration of the principal snakes of Vāsuki's race that fell into the fire; (§ 64) of Takshaka's race; (§ 65) of Airāvata's race; (§ 66) of Kauravya's race; (§ 67) of Dhṛtarāshṭra's race (I, 57).—§ 68: Janamejaya let the sacrifice come to an end; he bestowed wealth unto Lohitāksha, etc.

[Satyavatīlābhopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating how Çāntanu got Satyavatī"). § 165 (cf. Āpavop.): Description of Çāntanu, the princes anointed him as "King of Kings" (rājarājyē, v. 3974); he ruled the earth from Hāstinapura, the town (puṭabhedana) of the Kurus (v. 3978); there was no killing of deer, boars, etc., under his reign (cf. § 162!) except for the sacrifices to the gods, ṛshis, and pitṛs. For thirty-six years he, without enjoying the love of women, roamed about in the woods, and his son, Gāṅgeya Devavrata, the Vasu, was equal to him. One day, when pursuing a deer he had wounded along the banks of the Gaṅgā, he saw a youth who, with a heavenly weapon, checked the flow of the Gaṅgā. It was his son who, knowing him, but not known by him, and clouding his perception by illusion (māyā), suddenly disappeared. On Çāntanu's prayer, Gangā appeared holding the boy, and having told him that he was his son, and that he had studied all the Vedas and their Aṅgas with Vasishṭha and knew all çāsṭras that were known by Uçanas and Bṛhaspati (adored by the gods and Asuras), and by the ṛshi Rāma Jāmadagnya, and also the rājadharmas, she let him take him to his capital, where he was installed as heir-apparent. After four years Çāntanu met with Satyavatī in the wood on the banks of Yamunā, and demanded her hand from her father, the king of the fishermen (dāçarāja), who would not consent unless Çāntanu would promise that his son by Satyavatī should become his successor on the throne. Çāntanu would not grant the boon, but returned to Hāstinapura and passed his time in sorrow until Devavrata, having learned from the old minister the cause of his grief, by declaring that he would adopt the vow of brahmacarya (including celibacy), prevailed upon the fisherman (who had formerly rejected the Devarshi Asita, because Parāçara had pointed out to him Çāntanu as a suitable husband for her), that he gave Satyavatī to Çāntanu, while the gods and ṛshis showered flowers upon Devavrata, calling him Bhīshma. Bhīshma then took the maiden to Hāstinapura on his chariot, and Çāntanu bestowed upon him the boon of death at choice (I, 100). (For continuation v. Citrāṅgadop.)

Saubhavadhākhyāna ("the story of the destruction of Saubha"). § 71 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 428 (i.e. Saubhavadhopākhyāna).

[Saubhavadhopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to the destruction of Saubha"; cf. Saubhavadhākhyāna). § 319 (cf. Arjunābh.). Kṛshṇa related: When Çiçupāla, the son of Damaghosha, had been slain, his brother, the Mārttikāvata-king Çālva, in order to avenge him, came to Dvārakā in the Saubha, who moved at will and slew many of the Vṛshṇis, and sought for Kṛshṇa desiring to kill him. Kṛshṇa was in Indraprastha at the rājasūya of Yudhishṭhira, and when he learnt this on returning home, he set out to slay him, and found him in an island in the ocean (see Nīl. and PCR.; BR. "a bay"), and blowing his conch Pāñcajanya, slew numerous Dānavas. Then, as soon as he heard of the game at dice, he had come to the Pāṇḍavas (III, 14).—§ 320. Copious description of the combats with Çālva: When Çālva attacked Dvārakā it was well furnished and strongly fortified (description of fortifications and measures taken to defend the city by Ugrasena, Uddhava, etc.) and defended by Gada, Çāmba, etc. (III, 15). Cārudeshṇa (son of Kṛshṇa and Rukmiṇī), Çāmba (son of Kṛshṇa and Jāmbavatī), and Pradyumna (son of Kṛshṇa and Rukmiṇī) rushed out against him. They on both sides fought by means of māyā. Çāmba put Kshemavṛddhi, the commander of Çālva's troops, to flight by a shower of arrows, and slew a Daiteya named Vegavat with his mace. Cārudeshṇa slew the Dānava Vivindhya with a consecrated arrow. Then Çālva, riding on Saubha, encountered Pradyumna (III, 16). Riding on his chariot with a gaping makara in its standard, Pradyumna with showers of arrows slew the Dānavas and pierced the heart of Çālva so that he fell in a swoon, but he rose again and wounded Pradyumna about his throat so that he became senseless (III, 17). Pradyumna's charioteer Dāruki, a sūta, carried him off the field by the help of his fleet steeds, but when Pradyumna had regained his senses, he ordered him to turn the chariot, reminding him of the customs of the Vṛshṇis in battle, and saying that he had restrained Kṛtavarman, the son of Hṛdika, from sallying out, as he would himself resist Çālva (III, 18). As Çālva used his māyā of the Asuras, Pradyumna shot him down with the Brahmāstra, and was about to aim another arrow at him, capable of killing any person, when all the hosts of the gods, with Indra and Dhaneçvara (i.e. Kubera), sent Nārada and Çvasana (i.e. the Wind), who ordered him to desist as the creator (Dhātṛ) had destined Kṛshṇa, the son of Devakī, to slay him. Çālva then mounted Saubha and went away through the skies leaving Dvārakā (III, 19). When Çālva had left Dvārakā, Kṛshṇa returned from the rājasūya, and found Dvārakā deprived of its splendour, etc. He learnt from Hārdikya (i.e. Kṛtavarman) about the invasion of Çālva, committed the city to the charge of king Āhuka and Ānakadundubhi (i.e. Vasudeva), etc., bowed to Bhava (i.e. Çiva), and set out on his chariot yoked with Çaibya and Sugrīva and with Dāruka for his charioteer, blowing the Pāñcajanya, till he arrived at Mārttikāvata, and pursued Çālva (Daiteyāpasadaḥ, v. 796), who, staying in Saubha, remained in the sky above the midst of the ocean a kroça off, so that Kṛshṇa's soldiers could not see it, but were obliged to stand as mere spectators. After a long battle with arrows, in which Kṛshṇa killed numerous Dānavas, they took to fight by means of illusion, whirling maces, ploughshares, etc., and then mountain peaks. As none could ascertain whether it was day or night, or distinguish the points of the horizon, Kṛshṇa, becoming bewildered, made use of the Prajñāstra, by which he regained light (III, 20). Dāruka was covered all over with shafts. Then a messenger of Āhuka came from Dvārakā, saying that Çālva had come to Dvārakā and had slain Vasudeva. Kṛshṇa thought that then Sātyaki, Baladeva, Pradyumna, Cārudeshṇa, Çāmba, etc., must necessarily have been killed first. Now he saw Vasudeva falling from Saubha, and swooned away; but, as he, after regaining consciousness, saw neither Saubha, nor Çālva, nor Vasudeva, he concluded that it was illusion (III, 21). Though Kṛshṇa could not see Saubha, which had vanished through illusion, he discharged many arrows from the Çārṅga. The Dānavas set up a loud howl, and when Kṛshṇa, making use of a weapon that pierced the foe following the sound, killed them at one place, the yell ceased at that place and started from another quarter. Then Saubha reappeared at Prāgjyotisha. Kṛshṇa, Dāruka, and the horses were covered by torrents of rocks that concealed them, and the Vṛshṇis fled in all directions. Kṛshṇa then destroyed the crags with Indra's thunderbolt, Dāruka pointed at Çālva and exhorted Kṛshṇa to slay him. Kṛshṇa made use of his Āgneya weapon and hurled his discus Sudarçana (b) against the city of Saubha, that fell cut in twain like the city of Tripura by the shafts of Maheçvara. Then the discus came back into his hands and was hurled against Çālva and cut him in twain. The remaining Dānavas fled in fear. Kṛshṇa returned to the Ānarttas. It was for this reason that he could not come to Hāstinapura and prevent the gambling.—§ 321: Then Kṛshṇa took leave of Yudhishṭhira, etc., and set out for Dvārakā in his chariot yoked with Çaibya and Sugrīva, taking with him Subhadrā and Abhimanyu. Then Dhṛshṭadyumna set out for his own city, taking with him the Draupadeyas. And the Cedi king, Dhṛshṭaketu (Çiçupāla's son, Nīl.), set out for his beautiful city of Çuktimatī, taking with him his sister [Kareṇumatī, the wife of Nakula; Nīl., v. I, 3831]. Also the Kaikeyas (B. Kekayāḥ; Sahadevaçyālāḥ, Nīl.) went away. But the brahmans, vaiçyas, and inhabitants of the country would not leave the Pāṇḍavas. Yudhishṭhira in due time ordered his men to make the chariots ready (III, 22). (For continuation v. Dvaitavanaprav.).

[Saugandhikāharaṇaṃ] ("the bringing of the fragrant lotuses"; cf. Tīrthayātrāp.). § 431: When Bhīma was embraced by Hanumat his fatigue went off. Hanumat asked him not to tell anyone that he dwelt there; this was the time of the arrival of the gods and of the Gandharvas (cf. v. 11220); he declared himself willing if Bhīma might wish it to go to Hāstinapura and slay the Dhārtarāshṭras, etc., and dive into the army of his foes, giving leonine roars and remaining on the flagstaff of Arjuna's chariot. Then Hanumat vanished (III, 151).—§ 432: Description of the proceeding of Bhīma along the Gandhamādana till he found the lotuses (III, 152). Description of the lotus-lake, near Kailāsa, guarded by hundreds of thousands of Rākshasas (called Krodhavaçāḥ), sprung from a cascade near the abode of Kubera, the sporting place of Kubera, frequented by Gandharvas, Apsarases, gods, divine ṛshis, Yakshas, Kimpurushas, Rākshasas, and Kinnaras. Bhīma drank of the water (III, 153). The Krodhavaças ordered Bhīma to ask the permission of Kubera before he entered the lake; but Bhīma plunged into the water, and as the Rākshasas attacked him, he slew 100 of them with his mace, inlaid with golden plates, and then drank of the water, by which his strength was fully restored, and gathered saugandhika-lotuses, while the Krodhavaças fled through the sky to the peaks of Kailāsa and gave account to Kubera, who said: "Let Bhīma take as many lotuses as he likes." The Rākshasas then returned to Bhīma (III, 154).—§ 433: As there arose a violent wind with gravel, meteors, thunder, darkness, earthquake, dust, and evil omens, Yudhishṭhira, having learned from Kṛshṇā the depart of Bhīma, and alleging that Bhīma had not formerly done any wrong to the Siddhas (siddhānāṃ brahmavādināṃ, v. 11415), resolved to find out Bhīma and let Ghaṭotkaca carry Kṛshṇā, while other Rākshasas carried the Pāṇḍavas and the brahmans, and so they proceeded with Lomaça to the lake, where the slaughtered Yakshas were lying, and Yudhishṭhira entreated Bhīma never again to offend the gods; the Pāṇḍavas began to sport in the lake, and the warders (i.e. the Rākshasas), with rocks for weapons, bowed down in humility. There they dwelt for a short time on the slopes of Gandhamādana, expecting Arjuna (III, 155). —§ 434: One day when Yudhishṭhira, remembering the tīrthas, rivers (Ilā, etc.), etc., that they had visited, consulted with Bhīma how they should repair to the abode of Vaiçravaṇa (b), a voice from the sky said that they must first return to Badarī and thence to the hermitage of Vṛshaparvan (c) and that of Ārshṭisheṇa. There came a shower of blossoms. According to the counsel of Dhaumya, they all returned to the hermitage of Nara and Nārāyaṇa (III, 156).

[Sauptikaparvan(°va)] ("the section including the nightly attack": (a) the 10th of the greater parvans of Mhbhr., including the 83rd and the 84th of the minor parvans; (b) the 83rd of the minor parvans; cf. Sauptika). § 616: Açvatthāman, etc. proceeded towards the south. At the hour of sunset they reached a spot near the encampment. Hearing the shouts in the Pāṇḍava camp, they proceeded farther and reached a dense forest. Dhṛtarāshṭra interrupted Sañjaya by expressing his grief for Duryodhana, and then inquired about the acts of the three survivors (a). Sañjaya continued: Açvatthāman, etc., laid themselves down for rest under a huge banyan; Kṛpa and Kṛtavarman fell asleep;

Açvatthāman was kept awake by wrath and the desire of vengeance. He saw a fierce owl coming to that banyan and slaying a large number of crows roosting on its branches; at this sight he formed the resolution of slaying the Pāṇḍava army while buried in sleep; he roused Kṛpa and Kṛtavarman, unfolded his project before them, and asked for their advice (X, 1); Kṛpa dissuaded him from executing his wicked design; "Let us repair to Dhṛtarāshṭra, Gāndhārī, and Vidura, and ask them as to what we should do" (X, 2); Açvatthāman tried to refute Kṛpa's arguments (β) (X, 3). Kṛpa promised to aid Açvatthāman if the latter would fight the foe the next morning during daylight (γ); Açvatthāman's answer: he would not desist (δ) (X, 4). Kṛpa earnestly remonstrated with Açvatthāman, who declared his resolution to be unaltered (ε), yoked his steeds to his chariot, and proceeded alone, saying that he would avenge his father (ζ); Kṛpa and Kṛtavarman followed him. Approaching the Pāṇḍava camp, Açvatthāman stopped at the gate (X, 5). He beheld a being of gigantic frame (description; hundreds and thousands of Hṛshīkeças issued from its flames) ready to resist him, and fearlessly fought it; it devoured all the weapons of Açvatthāman, who repented of his rash deed, and resolved to seek the protection of Mahādeva (X, 6), to whom he recited a hymn (η). A golden altar appeared before him with a blazing fire on it; many mighty beings of extraordinary appearance came there (description), worshippers of Mahādeva. Açvatthāman felt no fear at the sight; he offered himself to Mahādeva as a libation on the fire; Mahādeva appeared and declared that the period of life of everybody in the camp had ran out; he gave a sword to Açvatthāman and filled him with his own energy; many invisible beings and Rā. proceeded to his right and left as he set out (X, 7). He asked Kṛpa and Kṛtavarman to stand at the gate and slay everybody who would seek to escape; he entered the Pāṇḍava camp like a thief and slew Dhṛshṭadyumna, etc. (θ) (description; he employed the Rudra weapon); Rā. uttered loud roars in joy; also Y. came there; Kṛpa and Kṛtavarman set fire to the Pāṇḍava camp in three places; "Arjuna is incapable of being vanquished by D., As., G., Y., and Rā." Before midnight the vast host of the Pāṇḍavas was slain by Açvatthāman; the camp was invaded by Rā. and Pç. that gorge upon blood and flesh. Açvatthāman forgot his grief for his father; when morning dawned he issued from the camp and joined Kṛpa and Kṛtavarman. Dhṛtarāshṭra asked why Açvatthāman did not achieve such a feat before; Sañjaya answered that the absence of the Pāṇḍavas with Kṛshṇa, as also the sleep, was the cause of Açvatthāman's success. They congratulated each other and resolved to give notice of the slaughter to Duryodhana (X, 8). They beheld Duryodhana still living, surrounded by wolves, hyenas, etc. They lamented and informed him (ι); Açvatthāman asked him, when he came to heaven, to inform Droṇa and embrace Bāhlīka, etc. (κ), and informed him who were yet alive (λ) and who had been slain (μ). Duryodhana regained his senses and praised Açvatthāman, etc. (ν). Saying "we shall all meet again in heaven", he gave up his life-breaths; his soul ascended to heaven. At early dawn Sañjaya came to the city and lost his spiritual sight. Açvatthāman, etc., ascended their chariots. Dhṛtarāshṭra breathed long and hot sighs (X, 9).

Setubandhana(ṃ) ("the building of the bridge"). § 535 (cf. Rāmopākhyānap.): The monkey chiefs (α) began to flock together to Rāma and Sugrīva on Mālyavat. On a lucky day the army set out. Hanūmat was in the van, Lakshmaṇa in the rear, the army was protected by Nala, etc. (β).

Arriving at the shore of the milky ocean (kshīrodaṃ . . . sāgaraṃ, v. 16289), Rāma thought of means of crossing it. He and Lakshmaṇa lay down on the seashore, the Ocean appeared to him in a vision and said: "I also have sprung from the race of Ikshvāku; the monkey Nala is a son of Tvashṭṛ, whatever he will throw into my waters I will support." Nala then built a bridge, which to this day is known as Nalasetu. At this time Vibhīshaṇa with four of his counsellors came to Rāma. Sugrīva suspected him to be a spy, but Rāma installed him in the sovereignty of all the Rākshasas and made him his own counsellor and the friend of Lakshmaṇa. It was under the guidance of Vibhīshaṇa that the army crossed the bridge in a month. Rāma then caused the gardens of Laṅkā to be devastated by his monkeys. Rāvaṇa's counsellors Çuka and Sāraṇa came as spies and were seized by Vibhīshaṇa, but dismissed by Rāma. Rāma then sent Aṅgada as his envoy to Rāvaṇa (III, 283).

Sitāçva ("having white horses") = Arjuna: III, †11898.

Sītāharaṇa(ṃ) ("the carrying away of Sītā"). § 529 (cf. Rāmopākhyānap.). Rāvaṇa caused Mārīca to entice away Rāma by assuming the shape of a deer with golden horns and a golden skin. Seeing this deer Rāma pursued it, like Rudra pursuing the stellar deer (tārāmṛgaṃ) in days of yore; struck with Rāma's arrow Mārīca, imitating Rāma's voice cried out, calling upon Sītā and Lakshmaṇa. Lakshmaṇa, thinking that nobody was able to slay Rāma, at first inclined to stay there and protect Sītā, but as she suspected him, he set out on the track of Rāma. Then Rāvaṇa, in the guise of an ascetic, with shaven head and with a kuṇḍala and a triple staff, came to the hermitage and began to carry away Sītā to Laṅkā; on his way he was seen by the vulture Jaṭāyu (III, 278).

Sitāṅga = Çiva (1000 names[1]).

Sītā-Rāvaṇasaṃvāda ("discourse between Sītā and Rāvaṇa"). § 533 (cf. Rāmopākhyānap.). While Sītā in Laṅkā was grieving for Rāma and was waited on by Rākshasīs, Rāvaṇa, afflicted by the shafts of Kāma, asked her to accept him as her lord, but was rejected. Sītā continued to dwell there, treated with tenderness by Trijaṭā (III, 281).

Sītāsāntvana ("the consoling of Sītā"). § 532 (cf. Rāmopākhyānap.). In Laṅkā Rāvaṇa placed Sītā in an abode equal to Nandana and caused Rākshasīs and Piçācīs to guard her. The Rākshasī Trijaṭā told her of the Rākshasa Avindhya who had told her of Rāma's and Lakshmaṇa's meeting with Sugrīva and of the curse of Nalakūbara (b) which prevented Rāvaṇa from violating Sītā, and of a dream of evil omens about Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarṇa, etc., running towards a southern direction, but of good omens about Vibhīshaṇa and his four counsellors (ascending the mountain Çveta), and Rāma, Lakshmaṇa, and Sītā (running to a northern direction) (III, 280).

Lying on that golden clump of reeds he was praised by G., etc. Gaṅgā waited upon him, and Earth held him; the celestial priest Bṛhaspati performed the usual rites (jātakarmādikāḥ kriyāḥ); the Veda in a fourfold form (caturmūrtiḥ) and the fourfold (catushpādaḥ) Dhanurveda and all weapons (çastragrāmaḥ sasaṅgrahaḥ) approached him. One day he saw Çiva and Umā amid a swarm of ghastly creatures (description). Also the seven Mātṛs were present there, and S., V.-D., M., V., P., R., Ā., Si., Serpents, Dā., the birds, Brahmán with his two sons, and Vishṇu and Indra, and D.-G. headed by Nārada and D.-ṛ., and Si. headed by Bṛhaspati, and the fathers of the universe who are the gods of even the gods, and the Yāmas and Dhāmas. Çiva, Umā, Gaṅgā, and Agni each thought: "he will come to me," therefore he by his yoga power assumed four forms; Skanda went to Rudra, Viçākha to Umā, Çākha (which is his Vāyu-form) to Agni, Naigameya to Gaṅgā. D., Dā., and Rā. made a loud noise. Rudra, Umā, Agni, and Gaṅgā prevailed upon Brahmán, who had formerly given away the sovereignties of D., G., Rā., Bh., Y., birds, and Pn., that he gave him the state of a generalissimo (senāpatya) among all creatures; and Brahmán ordered the kings of the hosts of the gods to wait upon him. Then the gods headed by Brahmán, taking Skanda with them, came together to Himavat for his instalment on the bank of the Sarasvatī (puṇyāṃ Haimavatīṃ devīṃ), which at Samantapañcaka is celebrated over the three worlds; there D. and G. cheerfully took their seats (IX, 44). Collecting all articles for the investiture according to the scriptures, Bṛhaspati duly poured libations into the fire; Himavat gave a seat adorned with gems, on which Kārttikeya was seated; Indra, etc. (γ) there came together; Brahmán, Kāçyapa, etc., poured water from the Sarasvatī upon Skanda, even as the gods had poured water on the head of Varuṇa, the lord of the waters, in order to invest him with sovereignty. Brahmán gave to Skanda four mighty companions (mahāpārishadān) with speed like the wind, and crowned with ascetic success (siddhān): Nandisena, Lohitāksha, Ghaṇṭākarṇa, and Kumudamālin. Sthāṇu gave to Skanda a mighty companion (pārishadaṃ) capable of producing 100 illusions, and who, in the great battle between the gods and the Asuras, slew with his hands alone 14 millions (prayutāni caturdaça). Then the gods made over to Skanda an army consisting of Nairṛtas of a form like that of Vishṇu. Then D. with I., G., Y., Rā., Mu. and P. shouted "victory" (jayaçabdaṃ). Then Yama gave him two companions (anucarau), both of whom resembled Death (read Yamaḥ Kālopamau with C., B. has Yama-Kālopamau): Unmātha and Pramātha. Sūrya gave him two of his followers, Subhrāja and Bhāsvara; Soma gave him two companions (anucarau): Maṇi and Sumaṇi, both like summits of Kailāsa, with white garlands and white unguents. Agni gave to his son (i.e. Skanda) the heroic Jvālājihva and Jyotis. Aṃça gave him five companions: Parigha, etc. (δ). Indra gave him two companions: Utkroça and Pañcaka, armed with thunderbolt and club respectively, and who had in battle slain innumerable enemies of Indra. Vishṇu gave him three companions: Cakra, etc. (ε). The Açvins gave him Vardhana and Nandana, who had mastered all the sciences. Dhātṛ gave him five companions: Kunda, etc. (ζ). Tvashṭṛ gave him Cakra and Anucakra, both capable of producing illusions (mahāmāyau), etc. Mitra gave him Suvrata and Satyasandha of great learning and ascetic merits (tapovidyādharau), and capable of granting boons. Vidhātṛ gave him Suprabha and Çubhakarman. Pūshan gave him two companions (pārshadau): Pāṇītaka and Kālika, with great powers of illusion (mahāmāyāvinau). Vāyu gave him Bala and Atibala, with great mouths. Varuṇa gave him Yama and Atiyama (PCR.: Ghasa and Atighasa), with mouths like that of the timi. Himavat gave him Suvarcas and Ativarcas. Meru gave him Kāñcana and Meghamālin. Manu gave him Sthira and Atisthira. Vindhya gave him Ucchṛṅga and Atiçṛṅga (PCR.: Ucchrita and Agniçṛṅga) who fought with large stones. Samudra (the ocean) gave him Saṅgraha and Vigraha, armed with maces. Pārvatī gave him Unmāda, Çaṅkukarṇa, and Pushpadanta. Vāsuki gave him the snakes Jaya and Mahājaya. Similarly S., R., V., P., etc. gave commanders of forces armed with lances, etc. Moreover, there were several other combatants: Çaṅkukarṇa, etc. (η). Besides, Brahmán gave him thousands upon thousands of mighty companions, devoted to ascetic austerities and regardful of brahmans, of different ages and with different kinds of faces (extremely fanciful description; the faces of some resembled that of Garuḍa, etc.), they spoke various kinds of languages (nānābhāshāḥ; kuçalā deçabhāshāsu) (IX, 45). Also the large bands of the Mothers (Mātṛgaṇān), those slayers of foes, by whom the universe is pervaded, became the companions of Kumāra; the names of the Mātṛs are: Prabhāvatī, etc. (θ) (description), some of them partook of the nature of Yama, some of that of Rudra, etc. (ι); they were beautiful like Aps., in voice they resembled the kokila, in prosperity Kubera, in battle their energy resembled that of Indra, etc., they have their abodes on trees and open spots and crossings of four roads, also in caves, crematoriums, mountains, and springs; they speak different languages. Indra gave to Guha (i.e. Skanda) a dart for the destruction of the enemies of the gods (description), and a banner. Çiva gave him a large army named Dhanañjayā, protected by 30,000 warriors equal to Rudra himself. Vishṇu gave him a triumphal garland that enhanced the power of the wearer. Umā gave him two pieces of cloth, of effulgence like that of the sun. Gaṅgā a celestial waterpot produced from amṛta. Garuḍa gave him his favourite son Citrabarhin, a peacock. Aruṇa gave a cock of sharp talons. Varuṇa gave a snake of great energy. Brahmán gave him, as devoted to the Bráhman (brahmaṇyāya), a black deerskin and (Lokabhāvanaḥ, presumably = Brahmán) victory in all battles. (Description of Skanda's army.) The gods with Indra praised Kumāra. The D-G. sung, and Aps. danced. Skanda granted a boon to all the gods, saying: "I shall slay all your foes." He then, with that vast host, set out for the destruction of the Daityas, having Exertion (Vyavasāya), etc. (κ) in the van. All Dai., Rā., and Dā. fled, pursued by the gods. Millions of darts issued from Skanda's dart. He at last slew Tāraka (the chief of the Daityas), etc. (λ); the foes were consumed with flames, produced by Skanda; many were killed by his roars alone, etc. (description). Bali's son, the Daiteya Bāṇa, took shelter within the Krauñca mountain (named after its sound, resembling the cry of a krauñca bird) which Kārttikeya (i.e. Skanda) pierced with that dart given to him by Agni (! v. the note of PCR., page 186) (description); Vd. soared into the air; K. became very anxious; Dai. came out and were slain together with that son of the Daitya chief and his younger brother. Repeatedly hurled from Skanda's hand, the dart repeatedly came back to him. The gods, G. and M-ṛ (yajvānaḥ) honoured Skanda (yoginām īçvaram), the celestial ladies showered plenty of flowers upon him. Some speak of him as Sanatkumāra (the eldest son of Brahmán), some as the son of Maheçvara, and some as that of Agni, or of Umā, or of the Kṛttikās, or of Gaṅgā. That tīrtha on the Sarasvatī then became a second heaven; staying there Skanda gave to everybody various kinds of dominion and bestowed the three worlds on the foremost of the Nairṛtas (Nairṛtamukhyebhyaḥ, so both B. and C.; "the foremost ones of the celestials," PCR.): IX, 44, 2488; 45, 2528, 2537, 2539, 2540, 2542, 2557 (°sya sainikāḥ), 2617 (°syānucarāḥ); 46, 2671, 2686, 2688, 2697.—§ 615 (Baladevatirthayātrā): IX, 46, 2724, 2727 (abhishiktaḥ, all. to § 615*u*).—§ 619 (Strīvilāpap.): XI, 23, 652 (*çete . . . Skānda (XIII, 2013), v. Skanda[1].

[Skanda-Çakra-samāgama(ḥ)] ("meeting of Skanda with Indra").—§ 499 (cf. Skandotp.). The planets (grahāḥ) and upagrahas (see BR.), Mātṛs and the gaṇas of the parishads preceded by Fire and other terrible gods waited on Skanda. Indra, with the hosts of the gods approached, mounted on Airāvata, in order to kill him. But Skanda defeated them by flames, and when Indra pierced his right side with his thunderbolt, thence sprang forth an armed youth Viçākha (vajra-viçanād jāto, v. 14384), and Indra and the gods sought and obtained the protection of Skanda (III, 227).

Skandāpasmara, name of a demon. § 502 (Manushyagrahak.): III, 230, 14479.

Skandarāja = Skanda: XII, 12327 (C. has Skandha°).

Skandaviçākha = Çiva: XIII, 907 (C. has Skandha°).

[Skandayuddha(ṃ)] ("the combat of Skanda"). § 503 (cf. Manushyagr.). Then Svāhā, the daughter of Daksha, who had in vain loved Agni from her childhood, prevailed upon Skanda that she should live for ever with Agni, in so far as offerings with mantras to the gods and pitṛs (havyaṃ kavyañ ca) should always be coupled with the name of Svāhā.—§ 504. Then Skanda was sent by Brahmán to his father Rudra; for Rudra and Umā had entered Agni and Svāhā, and from this combination Skanda had sprung; Rudra's semen had been thrown back upon the hill, whence sprang forth Miñjikā and Miñjika, and portions of it fell into the Blood Sea, into the rays of the sun, upon the earth, and upon the trees, whence sprang forth the various troops of his pārishadas, living on flesh. These five classes of spirits should be honoured with sun-flowers (arkapushpaiḥ: Calotropis gigantea) for the sake of wealth and healing of diseases; Miñjikā and Miñjika must be honoured for the welfare of children; the females, named Vṛddhikās, who were produced in the trees and live on human flesh, must be worshipped by persons who desire to have children. These are the innumerable gaṇas of Piçācas.—§ 505. Airāvata had two bells named Vaijayantī; Indra gave one of them to Viçākha and the other one to Skanda; the standards of Skanda and Viçākha were red. Skanda, surrounded by troops of Piçācas and gods, sat on the golden mountain with the toys that had been given to him by the gods. Description of the Çveta mountain.—§ 506. Then Çiva, with Pārvatī, rode in their shining chariot, yoked with 1,000 lions and managed by Kāla, to Bhadravaṭa; they were preceded by Kubera (riding in Pushpaka) with the Guhyakas, and followed by Indra (riding on Airāvata) and the gods; in the right wing of his army was the great Yaksha Amogha, with the Jṛmbhakas, Yakshas, Rakshases, Vasus, Rudras, etc.; there was also Yama, with Mṛtyu, surrounded by hundreds of terrible diseases; behind Yama the trident of Çiva, named Vijaya, surrounded by Varuṇa, with various aquatic animals; the paṭṭiça of Rudra surrounded by clubs, etc., and followed by the umbrella of Rudra, and after this the water-vessel, worshipped by the troops and maharshis, and on the right side of this the sceptre (daṇḍaḥ), with Bhṛgus, Aṅgirases, and gods. Behind these rode Rudra in his white chariot, followed by rivers, etc.; Apsarases, nakshatras, planets, the children of the gods, etc., and Parjanya. Soma held a white umbrella over his head, and Agni and Vāyu held the two fans. Behind him came Indra and the rājarshis, and Gaurī, Vidyā, etc., and the sciences (vidyāgaṇāḥ). In the front the Rākshasa graha advanced, holding the standard. The foremost of Yakshas, Piṅgala, the friend of Rudra, who is always busy in places where corpses are burned, at one time was ahead of the army and at another behind it. Rudra is worshipped by mortals with virtuous actions in various forms. At the request of Çiva, Skanda took the command of the seventh army corps (skandhasya) and was advised always to look up to Çiva, then he should attain great welfare.—§ 507. Omens frightened Çiva, Pārvatī, the gods, and the Dānavas (Asuras, Daityas); Indra encouraged the gods when about to flee; the Dānava Mahisha crushed 10,000 of the gods with a mountain, put Indra and the gods to flight, and seized the pole of Rudra's chariot, while heaven and earth groaned, etc., and the maharshis lost their senses, but (as Rudra did not choose to kill him himself) Skanda killed him, cutting off his head that barred the entrance of sixteen yojanas [to the Uttara-Kurus, Nīl.], though the Uttara-Kurus at present pass easily by that gate. The Dānavas fell in large numbers from the lance and arrows of Skanda; the lance always returned to his hand again after killing thousands of enemies; the pārishadas of Skanda devoured them and drank their blood. When the Dānavas were defeated, Skanda went to Çiva and was embraced and praised by Indra. Then Indra, with the gods, took leave from Çiva and left the place, and Rudra returned to Bhadravaṭa, after having recommended to the gods to render allegiance to Skanda just as to himself. In one day Skanda had killed the Dānavas and conquered the three worlds* (ch. 231).

Skandhaviçākha, v. Skandaviçākha.

[Skandopākhyāna(ṃ)] ("episode of Skanda").—§ 500 (cf. Skanda-Çakra-samāg.). The Pārishadas of Skanda: When Skanda was struck with the thunderbolt, a number of male children were produced, who steal little children, whether born or in the womb, as also a number of female children. They adopted Viçākha as their father. Bhadraçākha (form of Skanda, cf. v. 14400), with a face like that of a goat, in the battle protected his sons and daughters, in the presence of the mothers. Therefore they call Skanda Kumārapitṛ (so B., C. has Kumāraṃ pitaraṃ), and those who desire to have sons worship Rudra as Agni, and Umā as Svāhā (so C., B. has Agnimukhāṃ instead of Agnim Umāṃ). The daughters of the Tapa fire obtained from Skanda that they became the mothers of the whole world; some of them should be good (çivāḥ) and some evil (açivāḥ). Having adopted Skanda as their son, the host of the mothers departed. Kākī, Halimā, etc. (in all seven) (a) had, by the grace of Skanda, a terrible son Çiçu, who is named vīrāshṭaka (i.e. consisting of eight men) or, when the goat's head is included, navaka (i.e. consisting of nine). The sixth face of Skanda is that of a goat, the best of the six, honoured by the mothers, that by which Bhadraçākha created the divine energy (? çaktiṃ yenāsṛjad divyāṃ). This happened on the fifth day of the bright half of the month, and on the sixth a terrific battle took place (III, 228).—§ 501. Description of Skanda. Çrī, embodied and looking like a lotus, rendered her allegiance to him. The brahmans and maharshis praised him, saying: "Hiraṇyagarbha! thou who wast born only six nights ago, do thou become Indra," and at his request they explained to him the offices of Indra (b). Even Indra besought him to become the lord of the gods. But, at the request of Skanda, Indra retained his sovereignty, and, with all the gods, anointed Skanda as the leader of the celestial forces, and fastened the celestial wreath of gold, of Viçvakarman's manufacture, round his neck. Rudra came with Pārvatī and honoured him. Skanda is called the son of Rudra because Agni is called Rudra by brahmans, and because he was produced by Rudra entering Fire, and because he was honoured by Rudra before all the gods, and because the Çveta mountain, where he was reared by the Kṛttikās, was formed of Rudra's semen virile. The red cock, given him by Agni, formed the ensign of Skanda, perched on the top of his chariot. The power (çakti) which conduces to the victory of the gods, advanced before him. An innate armour entered into his body, and always manifests itself on the battle-field. Under the recitation of holy texts he was honoured by D., G., Aps., Pç., etc. Then he married Devasenā (names v. 14451), Bṛh. performing the necessary prayers and oblations. Then Lakshmī began to serve him. Therefore the fifth lunar day is called Çrī-pañcamī, and the sixth "a great tithi" (mahātithiḥ) (III, 229).

[Skandotpatti(ḥ)] ("origin of Skanda").—§ 495 (Mārk.). Mārkaṇḍeya promised to tell the story of Kārttikeya, the son of Adbhuta, begotten of the wives of the Brahmarshis. Formerly, when the Asuras always defeated the gods, Indra, anxious to find out a leader for the celestial host, repaired to the Mānasa mountain, and, hearing a woman crying for protection, rescued her from the Asura Keçin, whom he wounded and put to flight (III, 223). She told Indra that she was Devasenā, daughter of Prajāpati, and that her sister Daityasenā had let herself be taken away by Keçin from the Mānasa mountain, where they used to sport with their female friends with the permission of Prajāpati. Indra said that she was a sister's daughter of his mother Dākshāyaṇī. She asked Indra to select a husband for her, who was able to conquer the gods, Dānavas, Yakshas, Kinnaras, Uragas, Rakshas, and Daityas. Indra was grieved, thinking there was no such husband for her.—§ 496. Then Indra perceived the Sun rising from the Udaya hill, and Soma (the Moon) entering the Sun on the amāvasyā (new-moon day) at the Raudra muhūrta, and the gods and Asuras fighting on the Udaya mountain, the morning twilight tinged with red clouds, the Sea blood-red; Bhṛgus and Aṅgirases offered oblations, and Agni took the oblations and entered the Sun, whilst the Sun was entering the twenty-fourth parvan, and Sindhu was flowing with a current of fresh blood, etc. Indra thought that, if now Soma or Agni gave birth to a son, this son might become the husband of Devasenā. Then he repaired with Devasenā to the world of Brahmán, who promised that it should be as Indra had thought. Then Indra, with Devasenā, repaired to the place where the devarshis Vasishṭha, etc. lived, and the gods also came thither to drink soma and receive their shares of offerings, and the Adbhuta fire came from the solar disc to the āhavanīya and made over the offerings to the gods. He, (Adbhuta), then saw the wives of the ṛshis sleeping in their āçramas and fell in love. In order to look at them daily, he entered the gārhapatya fire, and dwelt there for a long time, and at last, from despair, repaired to a forest in order to do away with himself. Svāhā, daughter of Dakṣha, who had in vain loved Adbhuta, now resolved upon assuming the guise of the wives of the seven ṛshis (III, 224). Svāhā first gratified her desire in the guise of Çivā, the wife of Aṅgiras, and then, lest somebody should unduly suspect the brāhmaṇa ladies, she went out of the forest in the guise of a bird (garuḍī, suparṇī), and on the Çveta mountain, that was covered with clumps of reeds and guarded with seven-headed poisonous serpents, rākshasas, Piçācas, etc., she threw the semen, which she held in her hand, into a golden basin. Then, assuming successively the form of five of the others, she did the same on the first lunar day (pratipadi). Only the form of Arundhatī she was unable to assume because of her ascetic merit and devotion to her husband. The semen produced a child, whom the ṛshis called Skanda (etymology v. 14315), with six heads, etc. On the second day it first assumed a form, on the 3rd it looked like a little child, on the fourth the limbs were developed. Seizing the bow used by the destroyer of Tripura, Skanda uttered a terrible roar, so that the great nāgas Citra and Airāvata sprang up. But Skanda seized them with two of his hands, and holding a dart in one hand, a cock in another, etc., and blowing a conch-shell, he terrified the creatures with his roars. The persons of various orders, who then sought the protection of Skanda, are called his followers by the brahmans (pārishadān brāhmaṇān, read brāhmaṇāḥ). Discharging his arrows in the direction of the Çveta mountain, he rent asunder the mountain Krauñca, the son of Himavat; therefore the swans and vultures go to the mountain Meru. The other mountains also screamed aloud. Then, with his lance, he rent in twain one of the peaks of the Çveta mountain. Mount Çveta and the other mountains left the Earth and fled; the Earth was torn asunder on all sides; she went to Skanda and regained her power; the mountains bowed down to Skanda and came back to the Earth, and all creatures worshipped Skanda on the fifth day of the lunar month (III, 225).—§ 497. Terrific prodigies were seen everywhere. The ṛshis tried to restore tranquillity to the universe. The inhabitants of the Caitraratha forest accused the wives of the six ṛshis, other ones the fowl (garuḍī) of being the cause thereof; but nobody suspected Svāhā. The seven ṛshis divorced their wives with the exception of Arundhatī, though Svāhā claimed the child as hers. Viçvāmitra, having concluded the sacrifice of the seven ṛshis, had secretly followed the god of fire, and knew everything as it had happened. He sought the protection of Skanda, and performed for him the thirteen auspicious rites of childhood (maṅgalāni kaumārāṇi): the jātakarman, etc., etc. Though Viçvāmitra informed the seven ṛshis of the innocence of their wives, yet they abandoned them unconditionally.—§ 498. The gods asked Indra to kill Skanda, but he dared not attack him, saying that Skanda was able to destroy even the Creator of the world. Then they let the Mothers of the world approach in order to kill Skanda, but they adopted him as their son and let him suck their breasts, especially the daughter of Krodha with a spike in her hand, and the daughter of the Red Sea, who lived on blood; and his father Agni came and, transformed into Naigameya (see BR.) with a goat's mouth, gratified him with toys (III, 226).

Sṛñjaya[1], one or more ancient kings. § 5 (Anukram.): I, 1a*, 223 (in Nārada's enumeration).—§ 267 (Yamasabhāv.): II, 8, 326 (in the palace of Yama). Cf. Sṛñjaya.

Sṛñjaya[2], one of the standard bearers of Jayadratha. § 522 (Draupadīharaṇap.): III, 265, †15597 (°-Supravṛddhau, only C., B. has Sañjaya°).

Sṛñjaya[3], father of Suvarṇashṭhīvin. § 595 (Abhimanyuvadhap.): There was a king of the name Çaibya (C. °vya), his son was S.; the ṛshis Nārada and Parvata were the friends of S. Seeing the daughter of S., Parvata asked if she was Çrī, etc. (a). Nārada obtained her as his wife. Parvata cursed Nārada, saying that he should not go to heaven at his will, and Nārada (enumerating what constitutes a marriage) cursed Parvata, saying that he should not go to heaven without him. Meanwhile, king S., desirous of a son, prevailed upon the brahmans to ask Nārada on his behalf, and, urged by Nārada, he prayed for a son possessed of every accomplishment, and whose urine, etc. should be of gold. This son was named Suvarṇashṭhīvin ("gold-spitter"), and increased the wealth [of his father] beyond all limits (description). Some robbers seized the prince and slew him, and cut his body into fragments but without finding any gold. The robbers then slew one another and sank into an unimaginably awful hell. To Sṛñjaya, who was afflicted with deep sorrow, the D.-ṛ. Nārada told the Shoḍaçarājika (q.v.), i.e., the histories of sixteen kings who had died (except the last, viz. Rāma Jāmadagnya), ending each narrative with the words: "as he died who was superior to thee and to thy son, thou shouldst not grieve for the latter who performed no sacrifice and made no sacrificial present." (Each narrative then ends with the words: Çvaityeti vyāharan [read vyāharat]; Nīl. takes Çvaitya (i.e. son of Çvitya) as a name of S., cf. also XII, 1052) (VII, 55-70). The grief of Sṛñjaya was dispelled and Nārada restored his son to life: VII, 55, 2138 (Çaibyasya . . . putraḥ), 2140, 2144 (nṛpatiḥ), 2146, 2154, 2169, 2170, 2182; 56, 2184, 2194; 57, 2196, 2207; 58, 2209, 2222; 59, 2224, 2247; 60, 2249, 2261; 61, 2263, 2270; 62, 2272, 2290; 63, 2292, 2301; 64, 2303, 2319; 65, 2321, 2332; 66, 2334, 2354; 67, 2356, 2375; 68, 2377, 2392; 69, 2394, 2425; 70, 2450; 71, 2451 (2457), 2459.—§ 595 (Abhimanyuvadhap.): VII, 71, 2472 (°sya putraṃ, i.e. Suvarṇashṭhīvin).—§ 618 (Jalapradānikap.): XI, 1γ*, 25 (putraçokārte, all. to § 595).—§ 632 (Rājadh.): XII, 29, 906 (°ṃ putraçokārttaṃ), 910, 916, 917, 922, 924, 931, 932, 935, 937, 938, 943, 944, 955, 956, 963, 964, 973, 974, 986, 987, 992, 993, 997, 998, 1003, 1004, 1012, 1013, 1022, 1023, [Sudarçanopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to Sudarçana"). § 720*b* (Ānuçāsanik.). Bhīshma said: Prajāpati Manu > Ikshvāku > 100 sons; the tenth of those, Daçāçva, became the king of Māhishmatī; Daçāçva's son was the pious Madirāçva > Dyutimat > Suvīra > Sudurjaya > R-ṛ Duryodhana, in whose kingdom there was no miser, etc., and who was learned in the Vedas and Vedānta. Duryodhana begat the beautiful Sudarçanā upon the river Narmadā; Agni, taking the shape of a brahman, demanded her hand from the king, who would not give her to him; then Agni vanished from his great sacrifice. Duryodhana repaired to the brahmans, who became informed of the matter by Agni; then the king consented, and Agni gave, as a marriage-dower, the boon to the king that he would always remain there, and Agni has always been present there to this day, and was seen by Sahadeva on his digvijaya. She bore to Agni the beautiful Sudarçana, who, even in his childhood, knew Brâhman. Sudarçana married Oghavatī, the daughter of king Oghavat and the sister of Ogharatha, and dwelt in Kurukshetra; he took the vow of conquering death by leading the life of a householder. He instructed Oghavatī that, for pleasing a guest, she must not spare even her own person. One day, when Sudarçana went out to fetch firewood, a graceful brahman came to Oghavatī and required and obtained her own person. Mṛtyu, with his iron club, was always at the side of Sudarçana, watching him in order to find out his flaws. When Sudarçana came home he showed no anger. The brahman turned out to be Dharma, who was pleased with Sudarçana, and said: "you have conquered Mṛtyu"; Oghavatī has been protected from defilement by your virtue and by her own chastity; you will attain to all the worlds in this your body, and, as yoga is in the control of Oghavatī, she will follow you with half her corporeal self, being with the other half [the river] Oghavatī. Then Indra came, riding in a fine chariot, and approached that brahman.

[Sukanyopākhyāna(ṃ)] ("the episode relating to Sukanyā"). § 405 (Tīrthay.). Lomaça related: When Cyavana, the son of the maharshi Bhṛgu practised austerities by the side of this lake, and, assuming the posture vīrasthāna, had been enveloped by an anthill, king Çaryāti came to the lake with his 4,000 wives and his only daughter Sukanyā. The viprarshi Cyavana, seeing Sukanyā, was gladdened and spoke to her, but she did not hear him. Then Sukanyā, seeing his eyes in the anthill, pierced them with thorns from curiosity. He, becoming very angry, obstructed the excrements and urine of Çaryāti's soldiers, and Çaryāti at last discovered the cause of their distress, and only obtained deliverance therefrom by bestowing Sukanyā upon Cyavana. Then Çaryāti, with his troops, went to his city, and Sukanyā remained with Cyavana (III, 122). Once, when the Açvins had seen Sukanyā, after she had bathed, they asked her to choose one of them for her husband, and as she refused, they entered the water together with Cyavana, and when they all came out of the tank young and beautiful they asked her to choose one of them and she choose Cyavana. Cyavana promised them to make them drinkers of soma in the presence of Indra. Then the Açvins, highly delighted, ascended to heaven (III, 123). When Çaryāti heard that Cyavana had been turned into a youth, he came with his wife and troops to see him, and became very glad. Cyavana caused him to perform a sacrifice with Cyavana as his priest. When Cyavana was about to take up soma in order to offer it to the Açvins, Indra forbade it, saying, that they were physicians and servants, assumed forms at pleasure, and roamed about in the world of mortals, and as Cyavana did not obey he prepared to hurl his thunderbolt at him, but Cyavana paralysed his arm and fulfilled his intention. Then he created a kṛtyā, a great Asura named Mada (description); this rushed forth to devour Indra (III, 124), who only was delivered when he had sanctioned that the Açvins should henceforth be entitled to the soma juice, saying that he had only intended to spread the fame of Cyavana and Çaryāti. Cyavana distributed Mada (who had been created repeatedly before) in drinks, women, gambling, and hunting.

Sulabhā-Janaka-saṃvāda(ḥ) ("the conversation between Sulabhā and Janaka"): § 709*b* (Mokshadh.). Bhīshma related the old narrative of the discourse in days of yore, in Dharma-yuga, between king Janaka Maithila Dharmadhvaja (devoted to renunciation, conversant with the Veda, the moksha-çāstra, etc.), whom many wise men desired to imitate, and the female mendicant Sulabhā, who practised Yoga and wandered over the Earth, and had heard from many tridaṇḍins about Janaka. By her Yoga-power she assumed a beautiful form and instantly repaired to Mithilā, and, on pretence of begging alms, presented herself before the king, who was surrounded by his ministers and learned scholars. By Yoga she entered the king's consciousness by her own consciousness (sattvaṃ sattvena). Then they conversed upon emancipation. The king said he was a disciple of the bhikshu Pañcaçikha of Parāçara's race, and fully conversant with Sāṅkhya and Yoga, etc.; Pañcaçikha had dwelt with him for four months in the rainy season. Sulabhā enumerated thirty principles. Sulabhā was the daughter of R-ṛ Pradhāna; in the sacrifices of her ancestors Indra used to come with Droṇa, etc. (a); no suitable husband could be obtained for her; therefore, she wandered over the earth alone, observant of the practices of asceticism. Sulabhā dwelt this one night in his person like a mendicant in an empty house (XII, 321).

[Sundopasundapākhyāna(ṃ)] ("the episode relating to Sunda and Upasunda"). § 246 (Rājyalābhap.). Nārada related: In days of yore the Daitya Nikumbha of the race of Hiraṇyakaçipu had two sons, Sunda and Upasunda, who always shared with each other happiness as well as woe, and never went anywhere unless together. Desirous of subjugating the three worlds, they practised terrible penances on the mountain Vindhya, which, by the power of their austerities at last began to emit vapour. In vain the gods repeatedly tempted them by means of every precious possession and beautiful girls, and by illusion, causing their sisters, mothers, wives, etc., to appear pursued by a rākshasa and imploring their help. When Brahmán granted them a boon, they asked to become immortal, which he refused, granting them instead that they should not need to be afraid of anything except each other, etc. They now desisted from their asceticism and returned to their abode, where they lived happy, causing even the moon to rise over their city every night, even out of season (I, 209). They set out to conquer the three worlds in the night under the constellation of Maghāḥ, with a large Daitya force cased in mail, etc. The gods sought refuge in Brahmaloka, and the Daityas subjugated Indraloka, and vanquished the tribes of the Yakshas and Rakshases, and the Khecaras, and the Nāgas in the earth, and the tribes of the Mlecchas dwelling in the ocean. In order to extinguish the sacrifices that strengthened the gods, they slew those that were performing sacrifices and the assistant brahmans, etc. Then they took up their abode in Kurukshetra (I, 210). The Devarshis and Siddhas and ṛshis were affected with great grief, and went to the abode of Pitāmaha, seated with the gods, the Siddhas, and the Brahmarshis, Mahādeva, Agni, Vāyu, the sun and moon, Çakra, the Pārameshṭhya ṛshis, the Vaikhānasas, the Vālakhilyas, the Vānaprasthas, the Marīcipas, the Ajas, the Avimūḍhas, etc. Brahmán sent Tilottamā (b) to them (I, 211). She came to Sunda and Upasunda as they were sporting in the Vindhya mountains, and from jealousy they struck each other to death with their maces. And Pitāmaha then came there with the gods and the great ṛshis, and granted to Tilottamā that she should roam in the region of the Ādityas. Then, bestowing the three worlds on Indra as before, he returned to his own region.

[Suvarṇashṭhīvi-sambhavopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to the origin of Suvarṇashṭhīvin"). § 634*b* (Rājadh.): Parvata, after having taken counsel with Nārada, granted a boon to Sṛñjaya in the form of a son (Suvarṇashṭhīvin), but Indra would not let him be long-lived, and Parvata would not destine otherwise from partiality to Indra, but Nārada told Sṛñjaya to think of him. Nārada and Parvata left Sṛñjaya's presence. Indra slew Suvarṇashṭhīvin, causing his vajra to assume the form of a tiger, on the shores of the Bhāgīrathī. Sṛñjaya, in his distress, thought of Nārada, who recited to him the Shoḍaçarājop. (§ 632*b*), and brought the child back to life, with Indra's permission; Suvarṇashṭhīvin ruled for 1100 years, gratifying D. and P., and procreated many sons ere he died (XII, 31).

Suvarṇavarman, a Kāçi king. § 52 (Janamejaya): I, 44, †1809 (Kāçipaṃ, father of Vapushṭamā, the wife of Janamejaya Pārikshita).

Suvarṇavarṇa = Vishṇu (1000 names).

[Suvarṇotpatti] ("the origin of gold"). § 747*b* (Anuçāsanik.). Vasishṭha told to Rāma Jāmadagnya (and again Bhīshma to Yudhishṭhira): After the wedding of Rudra and Devī on Himavat, all the gods, fearing that Rudra's offspring would consume the worlds, prevailed upon him to withdraw his vital seed (whence he is called Ūrdhvaretas); Umā cursed the gods, saying that they should become sonless; but Agni was not present. A small quantity of Rudra's seed, however, leaped into fire and began to develop; meanwhile, the gods, with Indra, were scorched by As. Tāraka; Ā., V., R., M., A., and Sā. all became afflicted; all the regions of the deities, etc., and the retreats of R. were snatched away by As.; D. and R. repaired to Brahmán (XIII, 84), who had granted Tāraka the boon that he should not be killed by D., As., or Rā., and Umā had cursed D.; Brahmán said that Agni was not there; therefore his offspring, transcending D., Dā., Rā., even G., N., and birds, will with his dart destroy Tāraka; Kāma is eternal, and in order to slay the enemies of the gods Agni will throw Rudra's seed into the Gaṅgā. The gods failed to find out Agni; a frog, having been scorched by the energy of Agni, appeared on the surface of the water, and said to the gods that Agni was now under the water; Agni, leaving the spot, cursed the frogs, saying that they should be without taste; the gods granted them boons (enumeration). An elephant revealed to the gods that Agni was now residing within a certain açvattha tree; Agni, entering the heart of the çamī tree, cursed all the elephants, saying that their tongues should be bent back; the gods granted that they should be able to eat everything and utter indistinct cries. Agni was then revealed by a parrot, and cursed the parrots, saying that they should be deprived of the power of speech; the gods granted them to speak the letter k, and made çamī-wood a sacred resting-place of fire. The waters in the nethermost regions had come into contact with Agni, and those heated waters are vomited forth by the mountain springs. The gods asked Agni to rescue D., Prajāpatis, and R. from Tāraka by begetting a heroic son. Agni united himself spiritually with Gaṅgā; an Asura uttered a frightful roar; Gaṅgā became agitated and unable to bear the seed, and threw it off on Meru; the fœtus had the complexion of gold, etc.; therefore R. and D. called Agni by the name of Hiraṇyaretas ("having gold for his vital seed"), and the earth Vasumatī ("endued with wealth"). That fœtus, having fallen in a thicket of reeds, assumed a wonderful form; the Kṛttikāḥ reared it as their son, whence it came to be called Kārttikeya; he was also called Skanda and Guha (etymology). It was in this way that gold came into existence as the offspring of Agni (Jātavedas), and hence gold was called jātarūpa; gold is truly the illustrious Agni, the lord of all things, and the foremost of all Prajāpatis; the most sacred of all sacred things is gold; it has for its essence Agni and Soma.—Vasishṭha continued: This tale (Brahmadarçana) was also heard by me in days of yore about Brahmán Paramātman ("the Supreme Soul"): In days of yore (lokādau, v. 4163), Rudra, who is Brahmán, etc. (δ), having assumed the form of Varuṇa (cf. v. 4133, Varuṇaḥ Pāvanātmakaḥ), performed a sacrifice, to which came the munis and all the deities with Agni, etc. (ε); Çiva (i.e. Rudra) then himself poured libations into his own self. At the sight of the celestial damsels the seed (endued with sattva, rajas, and tamas) of Brahmán fell upon the Earth; Pūshan took it up, and it was taken with the sacrificial ladle and poured as an oblation into the fire; thence Brahmán caused the orders of beings to spring into existence; further Bhṛgu, etc. (ζ); for this reason Agni is said to be all the deities. Bhṛgu was reckoned the offspring of Varuṇa, Aṅgiras that of Agni, Kavi that of Brahmán; Bhṛgu, Aṅgiras, and Kavi were all of them prajānāṃ patayaḥ; their offspring (v. 4144–4152) (Bhṛgu's: η; Aṅgiras': θ; Kavi's: ι) are called Vāruṇāḥ, and Kavi and Bhṛgu Vāruṇau. Agni is Brahmán, Paçupati, etc. (κ); gold is the offspring of Agni (v. 4146); when fire is not obtainable gold is used as a substitute, oh Jāmadagnya! (B. and C. wrongly read Jāmadagnyaḥ, which PCR. translates "one that knows the identity of gold with fire") by one who is conversant with the vedic authorities (v. 4165), etc. (v. 4166–7); Agni sprang from Brahmán, and from Agni sprang gold (v. 4168); those persons observant of righteousness who make gifts of gold are regarded as giving away all the deities (v. 4169), etc.; he who makes a gift of gold at the second twilight succeeds in attaining to residence with (sālokyaṃ) Brahmán, Vāyu, Agni, and Soma (v. 4173), and to the regions of Indra (v. 4174), etc.; he has never to fall down from the regions to which he attains (v. 4176). After a long time Kārttikeya grew up, and was chosen as generalissimo by all the gods with Indra; he slew Dai. Tāraka and many other Asuras. Bhīshma continued: "Thus addressed by Vasishṭha [Rāma] Jāmadagnya made gifts of gold to the brahmans and became cleansed of his sins" (XIII, 85). [For continuation v. Tārakavadhopākhyāna (§ 748).]

[Svargārohaṇaparvan or °haṇikap°] ("the section relating to the ascension to heaven", the 18th of the greater and the 100th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Svargaparvan, Svargārohaṇika(ṃ)[parva(n)]. § 795. Janamejaya said: "Having attained to Heaven, what regions were respectively reached by my grandfathers, the Pāṇḍavas and the Dhārtarāshṭras? Thou hast been taught everything by M-r Vyāsa." Vaiçampāyana said: "Having arrived in Heaven, Yudhishṭhira beheld Duryodhana blazing with effulgence and seated in the midst of Sā.; he expressed his indignation (α) and wished to come to his brothers; Nārada solicited him to desist from his wrath (β); Yudhishṭhira indignantly (γ) asked for his brothers and Karṇa, etc. (δ) (XVIII, 1); Karṇa especially lay to him at heart, since his mother had ordered him to offer oblations of water unto Karṇa, and he had noticed the resemblance between the feet of his mother and those of Karṇa; he would not stay in Heaven if his brothers were not there. The gods ordered a celestial messenger to lead Yudhishṭhira to the region reached by his brothers. The path was enveloped in darkness and stench, etc. (description); as he was about to turn back, he heard voices uttering piteous lamentations, calling him by name, and giving evidence to the happiness felt by his presence, and they turned out to come from Karṇa and his brothers, etc. (ϵ); he could not understand this perverse order of things (ζ); he censured the gods and Dharma, and declared that he would stay in Hell in order to comfort his relatives. The messenger returned and represented this to Indra (XVIII, 2). All the gods: M. with Indra, V., A., Sā., R., Ā., Si., M-ṛ. and Dharma came to Yudhishṭhira; the illusions of Hell (the river Vaitaraṇī, etc.) disappeared; Indra informed him that Hell should be seen by every king; he who first endures Hell must afterwards enjoy Heaven, and vice versa; Yudhishṭhira must see Hell because he had deceived Droṇa in the matter of his son; similarly Bhīma, etc. (η) had been shown Hell; but they have all been cleansed of their sins, and they had, as also Karṇa, attained to regions of felicity; D., G., and Aps. should wait upon Yudhishṭhira; his regions are far above those of kings and equal to those of Hariçcandra, etc. (θ). Dharma said that this was the third test to which he had put him (ι). Having bathed in the celestial Gaṅgā, he left his human body and assumed a celestial form, and became divested of all his enmities and grief. Accompanied by Dharma and praised by M-ṛ, he reached that place where the Pāṇḍavas and the Dhārtarāshṭras, freed from wrath, were enjoying each his respective status (XVIII, 3). Yudhishṭhira, praised by D., M., and R., proceeded to that place where the foremost ones of the Kurus were; he beheld Govinda (Kṛshṇa) in his Brāhma-form (description), adored by Arjuna; in another place Karṇa in the company of Sūrya, etc. (κ); as Yudhishṭhira wished to question Draupadī, Indra declared that she was Çrī, created for the Pāṇḍavas by Çiva; her five sons are G.; G-king Dhṛtarāshṭra was his uncle Dhṛtarāshṭra; Pāṇḍu frequently comes to Indra in his excellent chariot; Bhīshma is now in the midst of V.; others walk with G. and Y., etc., or Gh. (XVIII, 4). Janamejaya asked for what period Bhīshma, etc. (λ) remained in Heaven, and what became of them when the effect of their actions were exhausted. Sauti said: Thus questioned B-ṛ Vaiçampāyana with the permission of Vyāsa said: Everyone is not capable of returning to his own nature [i.e. final Emancipation, PCR.] when his deeds cease to work [the meaning seems to be that some persons lose their individuality by being absorbed into some deity before final Emancipation, but the text itself is corrupt]; this is a mystery of the gods, explained by Vyāsa, who is omniscient; Bhīshma attained to the state of V. [absorbed in V., not as a separate individual: sāyujya, not sālokya, PCR.]; therefore, now eight Vasus are seen; etc. (μ). Sauti then related the conclusion of Janamejaya's (b) snake-sacrifice. "I have now told thee everything that Vaiçampāyana narrated, at the command of Vyāsa, unto the king at his snake-sacrifice. It is a sacred tale, etc., composed by Vyāsa" (eulogy of Vyāsa) (ν), *; eulogy, etc., of Mahābhārata (c) (XVIII, 5-6).

Svargārohaṇika(ṃ) [parva] ("[the section] relating to the ascension to heaven"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 356 (°aṃ, sc. parva, i.e. Svargārohaṇaparvan).

Svargārohaṇika(ṃ) parva(n) ("Bhīshma's ascension to Heaven"), the 92nd of the minor parvans of Mhbhr. § 10 (Pārvas.): I, 2, 353.—§ 777. Vaiçampāyana said: When Yudhishṭhira had taken leave of the citizens, etc., he comforted the widows, whose husbands had been slain, with abundant gifts, and being duly installed on the throne, he reassured all his subjects [by acts of goodwill], etc. After fifty days, seeing that the sun had begun its northern course, he set out to see Bhīshma, taking with him what was necessary for the latter's cremation, accompanied by Dhṛtarāshṭra, Gāndhārī, Kuntī, his brothers, Kṛshṇa, Vidura, Yuyutsu, Yuyudhāna, and his other relatives and a great retinue, and his priests. He beheld Bhīshma surrounded by R. Vyāsa, Nārada, Asita Devala, and by the remnant of unslain kings from various parts of the country, guarded by the warriors appointed for that duty; all the inhabitants of Kurujāṅgala were also there. When Yudhishṭhira had told his errand, Bhīshma opened his eyes and saw all the Bharatas assembled. He seized the hand of Yudhishṭhira and welcomed him; he had now been lying there for fifty-eight nights, which he had felt to be as long as a century; now it was the bright fortnight of Māgha, and of this one-fourth had passed away. Then he reminded Dhṛtarāshṭra of the instructions he had received from Vyāsa, and that he should regard the Pāṇḍavas and especially Yudhishṭhira as his own sons. Then he praised Kṛshṇa as the Supreme God, and asked him to grant him leave to die, and that he should ever protect the Pāṇḍavas; he complained that Duryodhana had never been willing to follow his counsels; he said that he knew from Nārada and Vyāsa, that Kṛshṇa and Arjuna were R. Nārāyaṇa and Nara, who had lived for a long time in Badarī. Kṛshṇa then gave Bhīshma leave to die and come to the Vasus, comparing him to Mārkaṇḍeya. Having given some few admonitions to Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc. (XIII, 168), Bhīshma successively caused his life-breaths to leave his body, and the parts of his body became successively free from wounds and arrows, at which the bystanders became filled with wonder. His soul passed through the crown of his head, ascended to heaven like a meteor, and soon became invisible, while the celestial kettle-drums began to play, a rain of flowers fell down, and Si. and B-ṛ. applauded. Then the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (α) cremated the corpse. Then, accompanied by R., etc. (β), they proceeded to Bhāgīrathī (Gaṅgā), where they offered oblations of water to Bhīshma. Then Bhāgīrathī appeared and, weeping, praised Bhīshma (γ). Kṛshṇa comforted her, mentioning the present felicity of Bhīshma as one of the Vasus, and declared that he had not been slain by Çikhaṇḍin, but by Arjuna. Gaṅgā gave up her grief; all the kings, headed by Kṛshṇa, obtained her permission to depart, and all returned [to the city] (XIII, 169).

[Svayaṃvaraparvan(°va)] ("the section relating how Draupadī chose herself a husband", the 12th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). (Cf. Svayaṃvara). § 231. The Pāṇḍavas went to the Pāñcāla land in the company of brahmans, who told them of the svayaṃvara, and of Dhṛshṭadyumna, and Kṛshṇā (I, 184). On their way they beheld Dvaipāyana. They took up their quarters in the house of a potter, and adopting the brahmanical profession, they began to lead a mendicant life. Yajñasena (= Drupada) always cherished the wish of bestowing his daughter on Kirīṭin (i.e. Arjuna), but never spoke of this wish to anybody. He therefore caused a very stiff bow to be made, which was incapable of being bent by anybody except Arjuna; and causing some machinery to be erected in the sky, he set up a mark attached to that machinery, and said: "He who with this bow and these arrows hits the mark shall obtain my daughter." The arena was situated to the north-east of the capital (description of it). On the 16th day Draupadī, having bathed, entered the arena. Then the purohita of the Somakas gratified Agni. Dhṛshṭadyumna, possessing a voice deep as that of a kettle-drum or of the clouds, taking hold of his sister's arm, stood in the midst of the arena, and said: "Hit the mark by means of these five arrows." Then he addressed his sister, reciting to her the names, etc. of the assembled princes (I, 185).—§ 232. Enumeration (a) of the assembled princes (I, 186).—§ 233. There came also the devagaṇas on their chariots; the Rudras and the Ādityas, the Vasus and the Açvins, the Sādhyas and all the Maruts, with Yama and Dhaneçvara (i.e. Kubera) walking ahead; and also the Daityas and Suparṇas, the mahoragas, the Devarshis, the Guhyakas and the Cāraṇas, Viçvāvasu, Nārada and Parvata, the principal Gandharvas with the Apsarases, and the Asuras and Siddhas (v. 7017), and Halāyudha (i.e. Balarāma), and Janārdana (i.e. Kṛshṇa), and the chiefs of the Vṛshṇis, Andhakas, and Yadus, always obedient to Kṛshṇa. Kṛshṇa pointed out the Pāṇḍavas to his brother Rāma. When Duryodhana, the Cedi-king Çiçupāla (son of Damaghosha), Jarāsandha, the Madra-king Çalya, etc. had in vain tried to string the bow, and Karṇa, though having succeeded in stringing it, had, as a sūta, been rejected by Kṛshṇā, Jishṇu (i.e. Arjuna) came forward (I, 187). Some of the brahmans spoke reproachingly of Arjuna's daring undertaking, some approved of it (citing Paraçurāma and Agastya's drinking out of the Sea). Arjuna, bending his head to Īçāna and remembering Kṛshṇa, accomplished the task. The gods showered celestial flowers. Drupada was filled with joy. Yudhishṭhira with the twins returned home. Kṛshṇā approached Arjuna, who soon afterwards left the lists followed by her (I, 188).—§ 234. When Drupada expressed his desire of bestowing his daughter on that brahman, the kings resolved to slay Drupada and burn Kṛshṇā, but spare Arjuna, whom they took for a brahman. They rushed at Drupada, who was defended by Arjuna with the bow and by Bhīma with a tree torn up by the root. Kṛshṇa then knew, and said to Balarāma that they must be the Pāṇḍavas, who had escaped from the fire (I, 189). Karṇa was defeated by Arjuna ("accomplished in the Brāhma and the Paurandara weapons", v. 7105), and the Madra-king Çalya by Bhīma; then Duryodhana, etc., who had been engaged with the brahmans, desisted from the combat, because brahmans, though offending, should yet always be protected. Kṛshṇa said to them that those brahmans had justly acquired the maiden. The kings returned to their respective kingdoms. Bhīma and Arjuna, with difficulty, escaped from the throng, followed by Kṛshṇā.—§ 235. Kuntī was filled with anxiety, seeing that her sons were late in returning from their begging tour. Then, in the late afternoon, Jishṇu (i.e. Arjuna), accompanied by a body of brahmans, entered the abode of the Bhārgava (i.e. the potter, Nīl.) (I, 190). Bhīma and Arjuna presented Kṛshṇā as their "alms", and Kuntī, not yet seeing them, said: "enjoy ye all." Afterwards, she was alarmed at what she had said. Yudhishṭhira declared that Arjuna should wed her; but Arjuna replied that it was a sin for the younger brother to marry before the elder. Meanwhile, they all fell in love with Kṛshṇā. Then Yudhishṭhira recollected the words of Vyāsa, and, from fear of a division amongst the brothers, said that she should be the common wife of them all. Kṛshṇa and Balarāma then paid them a visit, and again went away (I, 191).—§ 236. When Bhīma and Arjuna were turning towards the abode of the Bhārgava, Dhṛshṭadyumna followed them and concealed himself in some part of the house. Then Bhīma and Arjuna and the twins returning from their begging tour in the evening, gave everything to Yudhishṭhira. Kuntī caused Kṛshṇā to distribute it, giving to Bhīma alone as much as to all the others, because he always ate much. Then they laid down for the night, and Dhṛshṭadyumna overheard their conversations. In the morning Dhṛshṭadyumna set out to report it to Drupada, who was sad, because he did not know, if perhaps a man of mean descent had taken away his daughter, though he thought it possible that it was Arjuna (I, 192).

[Tapaty-upākhyāna(ṃ)] ("the episode relating to Tapatī"). § 222 (Caitrarathap.). Arjuna asked why he had called him Tāpatya, and Citraratha said: "Sūrya had a lovely daughter Tapatī, the younger sister of Sāvitrī. Ṛksha's son, the king Saṃvaraṇa, duly worshipped Sūrya; to him Sūrya resolved to bestow his daughter. Once, when Saṃvaraṇa went on a hunting expedition, his steed died from fatigue on the mountain, and he began to wander on foot and saw Tapatī alone, and declared her his love. She did not speak a word, but disappeared. He wandered through the whole forest in search of her, and failing to find her, indulged in lamentations (I, 171). He fell down on the earth. Then she appeared again. He asked her to marry him according to the Gāndharva form of marriage. She said that she loved him, but told him to ask her father Āditya for her hand, with worship, ascetic penances, and vows (I, 172). Tapatī then ascended to the skies, and Saṃvaraṇa again fell down on the earth. At last his followers found him, and his minister raised him up and sprinkled his head with water, etc. Regaining his consciousness, Saṃvaraṇa sent away all his attendants with the exception of his minister alone, and then began to worship Sūrya. He also thought of his purohita, the ṛshi Vasishṭha. After the king had stayed thus on the same spot day and night, the Viprarshi Vasishṭha came there on the 12th day. Vasishṭha knew at once, by his ascetic power, what had happened and ascended to the sky in order to see Sūrya, and asked him to give Tapatī to Saṃvaraṇa. Saṃvaraṇa, with due rites, took Tapatī's hand on that mountain resorted to by the gods and the Gandharvas. And the king caused Vasishṭha to be proclaimed his regent in his capital and kingdom, etc., and sported with his wife in the woods on that mountain for twelve years. Now Indra for twelve years poured no rain in his capital and kingdom. Then Vasishṭha brought Saṃvaraṇa and his wife back into the city, and then Indra poured rain in abundance. Saṃvaraṇa, with Tapatī, performed sacrifices for twelve years. Their son was Kuru, the ancestor of Arjuna (I, 173).

Târakavadhopâkhyâna ("the episode relating to the destruction of Târaka"; continuation of Suvarṇotpatti, § 747*b*). § 748*b* (Ânuçâsanik.): D. and R., reduced to great distress [by Târaka's prowess and the conduct of Gaṅgâ by throwing away Agni's seed], urged the six Kṛttikâḥ to rear that child [i.e. Skanda]. Amongst the celestial ladies there were none, save these, that could bear the seed of Agni in their wombs. Agni became gratified. His energy was divided into six portions, and a portion was placed in each of the Kṛttikâs. All of them were delivered at the same time, and the six portions united into one. The Earth received the child from a heap of gold. He grew up in a celestial forest of reeds, reared by the Kṛttikâs (whence he came to be called Kârttikeya; etymology of Skanda and Guha). The thirty-three gods, etc. (α) came to see him; R. praised him, G. sang in honour of Kumâra, with six faces, etc. (description). The gods gave him various kinds of toys, etc. (β). Râ. and As. began to walk in the train of Skanda. Târaka in vain sought, by various means, to slay him. The gods made him the commander of their forces, and when he had grown up he slew Târaka with his irresistible dart as in sport, and re-established Indra in the sovereignty. Skanda became the protector of the gods and [always] did what was agreeable to Çaṅkara (i.e. Çiva). Gold is the powerful energy of Agni and was born [from the same seed] with Kârttikeya; hence gold is highly auspicious. Thus did Vasishṭha relate to Râma [Jâmadagnya] in days of old. By making gifts of gold Râma became purified of all his sins, and [finally] attained to a high place in heaven that is not easily attainable by men (XIII, 86).

[Tīrthayātrāparvan(°va)] ("the episode relating to the pilgrimage to the tīrthas", the 36th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr. Cf. Tīrthayātrā). § 356: Draupadī, Bhīmasena, Nakula, and Sahadeva lamented Arjuna; Sahadeva suggested to move from the Kāmyaka wood (III, 80). Then came the devarshi Nārada who, at the request of Yudhishṭhira, told them what the brahmarshi Pulastya had formerly said to Bhīshma about the merits of circumambulating (pradakshiṇāṃ yaḥ kurute) the earth for the purpose of visiting the tīrthas, when Bhīshma was engaged in a pitṛya vrata at Gaṅgādvāra (resorted to by devarshis, Gandharvas, and gods) in the company of munis, and made oblations to the pitṛs, gods, and ṛshis (III, 81). At Bhīshma's request Pulastya explained the qualities of a person who will acquire merit by visiting tīrthas; he said that the costly sacrifices, which only kings and very rich men are capable of affording, are not of greater merit than a sojourn in tīrthas, which even the poorest may accomplish.—§ 357: Then he first described Pushkara (q.v.).—§ 358: Then he enumerated a great many of tīrthas and the merit of visiting them.—§ 359: Vaḍavā (q.v.).—§ 360: Pulastya's enumeration of tīrthas continued (III, 82).—§ 361: Kurukshetra (q.v.).—§ 362: The enumeration continued.—§ 363: Rāmahradāḥ (q.v.).—§ 364: The enumeration continued.—§ 365: Maṅkaṇaka (q.v.).—§ 366: The enumeration continued.—§ 367: Pṛthūdaka (q.v.).—§ 368: The enumeration continued.—§ 369: Kurukshetra (q.v.).—§ 370: The enumeration continued (III, 84).—§ 371: Tuṅgaka (q.v.).—§ 372: The enumeration continued.—§ 373: Prayāga (q.v.).—§ 374: The enumeration continued.—§ 375: Gaṅgā is equal to Kurukshetra, wherever one may bathe in it, especially in Kanakhala and in Prayāga, which is the most excellent; a bath in the Gaṅgā in that place removes 100 sins. In the Kṛtayuga all the tīrthas were sacred, in the Tretāyuga Pushkara alone, in the Dvāpara Kurukshetra, in the Kaliyuga Gaṅgā. In Pushkara one should practise austerities, in Mahālaya one should make gifts, on the Malaya one should ascend the funeral pyre, in Bhṛgutuṅga one should kill oneself by fasting; bathing in Pushkara, Kurukshetra, the Gaṅgā, and Magadha (PCR. seems to have had another reading) one purifies seven generations of one's race upwards and downwards, etc.; as long as one's bones lie in contact with the water of the Gaṅgā, so long does one live, honoured in heaven (Svargaloke). Pitāmaha has said that no tīrtha is equal to the Gaṅgā, no God to Keçava, and none is superior to brahmans. This truthful description one should recite only to the twice-born, etc. (*). In these tīrthas have bathed the Vasus, the Sādhyas (so B.), the Ādityas, the Maruts, the Açvins, and the Ṛshis, who are equal to the gods. Only men of piety and learning are able to visit these tīrthas on account of their purified senses, their belief in god (āstikyāt), and their acquaintance with the Vedas (end of Pulastya's discourse, in which Yudhishṭhira sometimes is addressed instead of Bhīshma).—§ 376: Nārada continued: Then Pulastya disappeared, and Bhīshma (who understood the çāstras), at the command of Pulastya, wandered over the earth and ended his tīrthayātrā at Prayāga. The man that so walks about the earth is rewarded after death as much as for 100 horse sacrifices. "So wilt thou Yudhishṭhira obtain the eight-fold (ashṭaguṇaṃ) dharma, as Bhīshma did before, and because thou wilt lead the ṛshis, thy merit will be eight-fold; those tīrthas are infested by Rākshasas, and no king, save thyself, has gone there (*). The foremost of ṛshis are always there and expect thee: Vālmīki, Kaçyapa, Ātreya, Kuṇḍajaṭhara, Viçvāmitra, Gautama, Asita Devala, Mārkaṇḍeya, Gālava, Bharadvāja, Vasishṭha, Uddālaka, Çaunaka with his son, Vyāsa, Durvāsas, and Jābāli. With them do thou visit these tīrthas. The great ṛshi Lomaça will come to thee, do thou follow him and me to these tīrthas." Then Nārada disappeared and Yudhishṭhira spoke to the ascetics of the tīrthas (III, 85).—§ 377: Dhaumya-tīrthakathana (q.v.).—§ 378: While Dhaumya was speaking thus, Lomaça arrived and told that Arjuna had obtained Brahmaçiras (b), learnt the Gāndharva Veda, etc. (III, 91). Lomaça said that Arjuna had asked him to cause Yudhishṭhira to visit all tīrthas, like Manu and other rājarshis, and protect him from the Rākshasas as Dadhīca had protected Indra and Aṅgiras had protected the Sun. Lomaça had twice before visited the tīrthas. At the command of Lomaça, Yudhishṭhira caused the citizens, brahmans, and Yatis, who were not able to endure the privations of the journey, to return to Hāstinapura, where Dhṛtarāshṭra gave them their proper allowances from affection for Yudhishṭhira, and Yudhishṭhira, with only a small number of brahmans abode for three nights at Kāmyaka cheered by Lomaça (III, 92). The brahmans, who dwelt in the wood, prevailed upon Yudhishṭhira that he allowed them to partake of the tīrthayātrā. Just when they were about to start, Vyāsa, Parvata, and Nārada came to Kāmyaka, and caused them not only to fulfil human vows by purifying the body, but even divine vows by purifying the heart, that it might be free from evil thoughts and harbour only friendly feelings towards everybody. When those celestial and human ṛshis had performed the usual propitiatory ceremonies, and when they had worshipped the feet of Lomaça, Dvaipāyana, Nārada, and the devarshi Parvata, the Pāṇḍavas and Kṛshṇā started towards the east with Dhaumya and the ascetics on the day following Mārgaçīrshī, when Pushya was in ascendance, dressed in bark and hides, with matted locks, cased in mail, and armed with swords, etc., with Indrasena and other attendants with some fourteen (paricaturdaçaiḥ) chariots and a number of cooks (III, 93). As Yudhishṭhira asked why he who is virtuous is unhappy, and his enemies who are sinful, happy, Lomaça said that sinful men often prosper in consequence of their sins, but at last they are overtaken by destruction, even as in the devayuga the Daiteyas and Dānavas (Asuras), who practised vice (adharma) and did not visit the tīrthas, for a time prospered by their sin and vanquished the gods, who practised virtue and visited the tīrthas; at last, when the good qualities, prosperity, etc., left the Asuras and went to the gods, while bad qualities, adversity, etc., came to the Asuras, and Kali possessed them, they were overtaken by destruction. Nṛga, Çibi Auçīnara, Bhagīratha, Vasumanas, Gaya, Pūru, and Purūravas had by practising ascetic penances and visiting tīrthas, etc., obtained fame and wealth, etc., and so would Yudhishṭhira, and as Ikshvāku with his sons, etc., and Mucukunda, Māndhātṛ, and Marutta, and the gods and devarshis obtained fame by the power of asceticism, so would Yudhishṭhira, while the Dhārtarāshṭras, enslaved by sinfulness and ignorance, soon would be exterminated (III, 94).—§ 379: The Pāṇḍavas with their followers, proceeding from place to place, at last arrived at Naimisha, and thence to the Gomatī, etc. (enumeration of tīrthas visited).—§ 380: Brahmasaras (q.v.).—§ 381: Gaya (q.v.).—§ 382: Thence they came to the hermitage of Agastya, and dwelt in Durjayā (i.e. Maṇimatī, the city of Vātāpi, Nīl.); there asked by Yudhishṭhira Lomaça told: Agastyopākhyāna (q.v.).—§ 383: Description of the Gaṅgā (b). Then, having at the suggestion of Lomaça, with his brothers and Kṛshṇā, bathed in Bhṛgos tīrthaṃ (c) and gratified the gods and Pitṛs, Yudhishṭhira blazed forth in brighter effulgence and became invincible. At his request Lomaça told Jāmadagnyatejohānikathana (b) (v. Rāma[1]).—§ 384: Yudhishṭhira wished to hear the details of Agastya. Lomaça related: Agastyopākhyāna (q.v.).—§ 385: At the request of Yudhishṭhira Lomaça related how Agastya had caused Vindhya (q.v.) to cease to increase (§ 385), how Agastya drank up the Ocean (§ 386, cf. Agastyopākhyāna), Sagara (§ 387), Asamañjas (§ 388), Gaṅgāvataraṇa (§ 389).—§ 390: Then Yudhishṭhira proceeded to the rivers Nandā and Aparanandā and the Hemakūṭa (b, cf. Ṛshabhakūṭa) mountain. Having, at the command of Lomaça, bathed in Nandā, they proceeded to the river Kauçikī (c) with the hermitages of Viçvāmitra and of Kāçyapa, the father of Ṛshyaçṛṅga (d).—§ 391: At the request of Yudhishṭhira Lomaça told the history of Ṛshyaçṛṅga (q.v.)—§ 392: Starting from Kauçikī, Yudhishṭhira in succession repaired to all the sacred shrines (āyatanāni) and came to the sea where the Gaṅgā falls into it, and bathed in the centre of 500 rivers. Then they proceeded by the shore of the sea towards the Kaliṅga country. Lomaça said: "Here is the river Vaitaraṇī (b)." When they had all bathed in the Vaitaraṇī, Yudhishṭhira felt as if he were carried off from the region of men, and beheld all worlds, and heard the reciting of Vaikhānasas, whom Lomaça declared to be at the distance of 300,000 yojanas. Lomaça ordered him to be silent, as this was the divine forest of Svayambhū (Svayambhuvo vanaṃ) (c); taught by Lomaça the words to be recited (Oṃ namo viçvaguptāya, etc. [a]) Yudhishṭhira mounted the altar of Kaçyapa and bathed in the sea; then he went to the Mahendra mountain and spent the night there (III, 114).—§ 393: Lomaça told Yudhishṭhira the names of the ascetics (Bhṛgus, Aṅgirases, Vāsishṭhas, Kāçyapas), and he, with his brothers, paid a visit to them. Akṛtavraṇa, a follower of Rāma Jāmadagnya, told him when Paraçu-Rāma (q.v.) appeared, and that the following day was the 14th.—§ 394: At the request of Yudhishṭhira, Akṛtavraṇa (b) related the story of Arjuna Kārtavīrya (q.v.), and Jamadagni (q.v.), and Paraçurāma (q.v.) (§§ 394–8) —§ 399: Mahendrācala-gamana (q.v.).—§ 400: On their journey to the tīrthas they bathed in a holy stream, and thence reached to Godāvarī and to the sea (in the Draviḍa country); then to Agastyatīrtha and the Nārītīrthas, where they heard of and praised the deed of Arjuna, and gave away thousands of cows, and by and by they reached Çūrpāraka (C. Sūrp°), where they saw the altar of Ṛcīka's son surrounded by crowds of ascetics, and the shrines of the Vasus, of the hosts of the Maruts, of the Açvins, Vaivasvata, Āditya, Dhaneçvara, Indra, Vishṇu, Savitṛ, Bhava, Candra, Divākara, and of the lord of waters, and of the host of Sādhyas, of Dhātṛ, of the Pitṛs, of Rudra with his host, of Sarasvatī, of the host of Siddhas, etc., and then returned to Çūrpāraka, and from this tīrtha at the sea they came to Prabhāsa, where they offered libations to the Pitṛs and gods, and where Yudhishṭhira practised austerities for twelve days, subsisting upon air and water, and performing ablutions day and night, surrounded by fires kindled on all sides. There came to them Balarāma, Kṛshṇa, Çāmba, etc., Kārshṇi, the grandson of Çini, and other Vṛshṇis, and heard what had happened to them, and wept when they saw the Pāṇḍavas so exceedingly lean (III, 118).—§ 401: Bala-Rāma (q.v.).—§ 402: Sātyaki, citing Çaibya, etc., who did the work for Yayāti, recommended that Rāma, Kṛshṇa, Pradyumna, Çāmba (b), himself, Aniruddha, Gada, Ulmuka, Bāhuka, Bhānu, Nītha, the young hero Niçatha, Sāraṇa, and Cārudeshṇa should lead the united army of the Vṛshṇis, Bhojas, Andhakas, Sāttvatas, and Çūras (C. Sū°) against the Dhārtarāshṭras and kill them in battle, and that Abhimanyu should rule the earth until Yudhishṭhira had fulfilled his vow. Kṛshṇa said that the Pāṇḍavas would never accept the sovereignty unless it were won by their own prowess, and Yudhishṭhira assented to the words of Kṛshṇa, saying, that as Kṛshṇa alone knew him, so he alone knew Kṛshṇa, who would perceive when the time had come for bravery, and he and Sātyaki would then defeat Suyodhana. Then the Yadus returned home, and the Pāṇḍavas continued their journey accompanied by Lomaça, and came to the river Payoshṇī (c).—§ 403: Lomaça spoke of sacrifices that had formerly been performed at the Payoshṇī (b); he who bathed in the Payoshṇī would obtain the same lokas as Gaya.—§ 404: Having bathed in the Payoshṇī they went to Vaidūryaparvata and Narmadā, where they, according to the exposition of Lomaça, visited all the tīrthas and shrines, giving gifts to the brahmans by thousands.. Lomaça said that this was the junction between the Tretā and Dvāpara age, where a person is freed of all his sins, and that here was performed the sacrifice of Çaryāti (b). Yudhishṭhira wished to hear more about it (III, 121). — § 405: Sukanyopākhyāna (q.v.). — § 406: Lomaça recommended to Yudhishṭhira to visit the above-named lake, and Sikatāksha, and the Saindhava wood, and Pushkara (reciting the hymns of Sthāṇu, this being the junction of the Dvāpara and Tretā, etc.), and Ārcīkaparvata (b). Here the ṛshis eat rice boiled in milk. Here (?) is the Yamunā, where Kṛshṇa performed austerities; there is the holy spring of Indra, where Dhātṛ, Vidhātṛ, and Varuṇa rose upwards. In the Yamunā Māndhātṛ and Somaka Sāhadevi performed sacrifices (III, 125). — § 407: Māndhātṛupākhyāna (q.v.).—§ 408: Jantūpākhyāna (q.v.).—§§ 409–10: Plakshāvataraṇa-gamana (q.v.).—§ 411: Çyenakapotīya (q.v.).—§ 412: When they arrived at the hermitage of Çvetaketu (b) (who, with his sister's son Ashṭāvakra, was the best in that yuga of those conversant with the sacred lore (brahmakṛtāṃ), where Çvetaketu beheld the goddess Sarasvatī in her human shape and spoke unto her, "may I be endowed with the gift of speech," Lomaça related: Ashṭāvakrīya (q.v.).—§ 413: Lomaça pointed out to Yudhishṭhira Samaṅgā [or] Madhuvilā, where Indra, after the slaughter of Vṛtra, became purified from all sins, Kardamila, Maināka (cf. Aditi), the Kanakhala mountains, Gaṅgā, the lake Puṇya, the mountain Bhṛgutuṅga, Ushṇīgaṅga (PCR. Tu°), the hermitage of Sthūlaçiras, and that of Raibhya (b).—§ 414: Questioned by Yudhishṭhira, Lomaça related the Yavakrītopākhyāna (q.v.).—§ 418: They had soon passed the mountains Uçīrabīja, Maināka, Çveta, and Kālaçaila, and saw the seven-fold Gaṅgā (b). Here was the playground of the gods marked with their footprints (caraṇāṅkitaṃ). Now they should proceed to the mountains Kālaçaila, Çveta, and Mandara (c); protected by Kubera, etc., and by Yātudhānas, these mountains are difficult to ascend. There are also other followers of Kubera, cruel and friendly (raudrā maitrāç ca) Rākshasas. Description of Kailāsa (d). Lomaça asked Varuṇa, Yama, Gaṅgā ("the daughter of the mountain", v. 10836), Yamunā, the mountain, the Maruts, the Açvins, the rivers to vouchsafe Yudhishṭhira safety from gods, Asuras, and Vasus, and the mountains. Yudhishṭhira recommended them all to practise here the utmost cleanliness, and asked Bhīma to protect Kṛshṇā, who, in times of danger, even if Arjuna were present, ever sought protection from Bhīma (III, 139).—§§ 419–23: Gandhamādana-praveça (q.v.).—§ 424: Bhīma-kadalī-khaṇḍa-praveça (q.v.).—§§ 425–6: Hanūmad-Bhīma-saṃvāda (q.v.).—§ 427: Tretā-yuga (q.v.).—§ 428: Dvāpara-yuga (q.v.).—§ 429: Kali-yuga (q.v.).—§ 430: Hanūmad-Bhīma-saṃvāda (q.v.). — §§ 431–4: Saugandhikāharaṇa (q.v.).

Tripura, the triple city of the Asuras. § 11 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 543 (°sya nipātanaṃ, cf. § 606).—§ 320 (Saubhavadhap.): III, 22, 883 (Maheçvaraçaroddhūtaṃ papāta T°ṃ yathā).—§ 334*c* (Antardhāna): III, 41, 1703 (Çaṅkareṇa T°ṃ nihataṃ yadā).—§ 600 (Ghaṭotkacavadhap.): VIII, 156, 6864 (pureva T°ṃ dagdhvā divi devo Maheçvaraḥ); 175, 7979 (do.). — § 603*d* (Nārayaṇāstramokshap.). The Asuras had three cities in heaven: one of iron (belonging to Vidyunmālin), one of silver (belonging to Tārakāksha), and one of gold (belonging to Kamalāksha); Indra could not vanquish them; the gods repaired to Rudra and promised him the creatures slain in every sacrifice. Çiva then made Gandhamādana and Vindhya the two bamboo poles of his chariot, the earth his chariot, Çesha the aksha, the moon and sun the two wheels, Elāpatra and Pushpadanta the two pins of the yoke, the Malaya mountain the yoke, Takshaka the string for tying the yoke to the pole, and the creatures (sattvāni) the traces of the steeds, the four Vedas his four steeds, the Upavedas the bridle bits, Gāyatrī and Sāvitrī the reins, om the whip (pratoda), Brahmán the driver, Mandara the bow, Vāsuki the bowstring, Vishṇu the shaft, Agni the arrow-head, Vāyu the wings of the shaft (so Nīl.), Yama Vaivasvata the feathers in its tail, lightning the whetting stone, Meru the standard. Adored by gods and ṛshis he adopted a posture called after his own name, and stood immovable for 1000 years. When, however, the three cities came together in the firmament he shot that terrible shaft of three knots, inspired with the Yuga fire and composed of Vishṇu and Soma. While the triple city began to burn, Pārvatī repaired thither to behold the sight; she had on her lap a child having a bald head with five tufts of hair on it; Indra endeavoured to strike the child with the thunderbolt, but Mahādeva (i.e. the child) paralysed his arm. Indra, with the gods, repaired to Brahmán, who, understanding that it was Çiva, came with them and recited a hymn (θθ). Mahādeva became gratified, and the arm of Indra reassumed its natural state: VII, 202, 9570 (°sya vadhārthāya).—§ 606 (Tripurākhyāna): VIII, 33, 1415, 1416; 34, 1551, 1562, 1566, 1567, 1569 (the destruction of T. by Çiva is anew related, cf. § 603*d*).—§ 730*g* (Upamanyu): XIII, 14θ*, 798 (*vināçe . . . Tripuraghna, Tripuraghātin, Tripuraharta = Çiva, q.v.

[Tripurākhyāna(ṃ)] ("the episode relating to Tripura"). § 606 (Karṇap.). The first combat between the gods and the Asuras was about Tāraka (Tārakāmayaḥ). The Daityas were defeated. Then the three sons of Tāraka (Tārakāksha, Kamalāksha, and Vidyunmālin), by practising austerities, obtained boons from Pitāmaha (who refused to give them immunity from death): "residing in three cities, we will rove over the earth; after 1000 years we will come together, and our three cities also will become united into one; that foremost one amongst the gods who will, with one shaft, pierce those three cities united into one will be the cause of our destruction." The great Asura Maya (Viçvakarmāṇam ajaraṃ Daitya-Dānava-pūjitaṃ) constructed the three cities: Tārakāksha's of gold in heaven, Kamalāksha's of silver in the welkin, and Vidyunmālin's of iron on the earth; all in such a way as to revolve in a circle; each 100 yojanas in breadth and 100 in length (description). Those three Daitya kings (Dānavas) soon assailed the three worlds, and millions upon millions of flesh-eating Dānavas, who had before been defeated by the gods, came to them and settled in the three cities; Maya supplied them with everything by his illusive power. Tārakāksha's heroic son Hari, by penances, obtained from Brahmán a boon: a lake in his city capable of reviving the dead when thrown into it. They then exterminated all cities and towns, drove the gods from all places, and roamed over celestial forests, etc., and the asylums of Ṛ. Indra, with the Maruts, having tried in vain to pierce the three cities, repaired with the gods (Ādityas) to Brahmán, complaining of the Asuras. Brahmán said that no one else, save Sthāṇu (Īçāna, Jishṇu, i.e. Çiva), could pierce the three cities with one shaft. They all, with Brahmán and Ṛ. (devoted to penances and uttering the eternal words of the Vedas), sought Bhava (Çaṅkara, i.e. Çiva), who had perfect knowledge of the Soul, beholding in him those diverse forms that each had individually conceived in his own heart, and praised him (α) (VIII, 33). After the fears of P., D., and Ṛ. had been dispelled, Brahmán explained the matter to him. He said that they should fight united and with half his energy; as they said that they could not bear half his energy, he promised to slay the foes endued with half of their united energy. From that time Çaṅkara came to be called Mahādeva. Gathering portions from all forms in the three worlds they let Viçvakarman construct him a chariot; they made Vishṇu the point, Soma the head, and Agni the staff of the arrow; Earth the chariot; Mandara its axle; Gaṅgā its jaṅghā; the points of the compass its ornaments; the constellations its shaft; the Kṛta-age its yoke; Vāsuki its kūbara; Himavat and Vindhya its apaskara and adhishṭhāna; the Udaya and Asta mountains its wheels; the Ocean (the abode of the Dānavas) its other axle; the seven Ṛ.'s its parishkara; Day and Night, etc., its anukarsha; the planets and the stars its wooden fence; dharma, artha, and kāma its triveṇu; the herbs and the creepers, etc., its bells; the sun and moon were made its [other] wheels; Day and Night its wings; the ten foremost of Snakes Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc., its [other] shaft; the sky its [other] yoke; the clouds Saṃvartaka and Balāhaka the leathern strings of the yoke; the twilight, Dhṛti, Medhā, Sthiti, Sannati, and the firmament with planets and stars its covering-skins; the regents of the world (Indra, Varuṇa, Yama, and Kubera) its steeds; the cardinal and subsidiary directions its reins; Vashaṭkāra the goad; Gāyatrī the string attached to the goad; the four auspicious days (v. the note of PCR., p. 112) the traces of its steeds; the P. (Rohakāḥ) presiding over them the pins; Action and Truth and Penance and Profit its chords; Mind the ground; Speech the track; it was resplendent with lightning and Indra's bow; that space of time, which, on a former occasion, had, in the sacrifice of Īçāna, been fixed as a year, the bow; the goddess Sāvitrī the bowstring; a celestial coat of mail was made, sprung from the wheel of Time; the golden mountain Meru was made its flagstaff; the clouds with flashes of lightning its banners. Çankara placed upon it his own celestial weapons. Making the sky its flagstaff, he placed upon it his bull; Brahmadaṇḍa, Kāladaṇḍa, Rudradaṇḍa, and Fever became the protectors of the sides of the chariot; Atharvan and Aṅgiras the protectors of the wheels; the Ṛgveda, the Sāmaveda, and the Purāṇas stood in front of the chariot; the itihāsa and the Yajurveda were the protectors of the rear; all sacred Speeches and Sciences stood around it, and all hymns and Vashaṭkāra; om in the van. Having made the year with the six seasons his bow, he made his own shadow (i.e. the Death-night, Raudrī kālarātrī, Rudra being Kāla) the bowstring; Vishṇu, Agni, and Soma the arrow (v. supra); the universe is said to consist of Agni and Soma, and similarly to consist of Vishṇu, who is the soul of Bhava. Çaṅkara placed on that bow his wrath, the unbearable fire of anger, born of the wrath of Bhṛgu and Aṅgiras. The Wind (Çvasana) was caused to breathe fragrance. The great Ṛ., G., D., Aps. praised Mahādeva when he was about to ascend the chariot. He asked to get as his driver him who was superior to himself; the gods prevailed upon Brahmán to become his driver. The great Ṛ., G., D., Aps. praised Mahādeva after he had ascended the chariot. His bull uttered tremendous roars, so that many descendants and followers of Tāraka breathed their last. Frightful portents appeared. In consequence of the weight of Soma, etc. (β), the chariot seemed to sink. Then Nārāyaṇa, issuing out of the point of the arrow, assumed the form of a bull and raised the chariot. Rudra, standing on the head of his bull and the back of his steeds, beholding the Dānava city, cut off the teats of the horses and clove the hoofs of the bull; from that date the hoof of the bovine species came to be cloven and the horses to be without teats. He had united the Pāçupata weapon with the shaft. When the three cities became united, the D., Si., and great Ṛ. uttered the word Jaya adoring Maheçvara. When he had shot his arrow the cities began to fall down, and burning the Asuras, he threw them into the western ocean. The fire, born of his wrath, he quenched, lest it should reduce the three worlds to ashes. D., Ṛ., and the three worlds gratified Sthāṇu.

Tulādhāra, a merchant. § 680*b* (Tulādhāra-Jājalisaṃv.): XII, 262, 9277 (°sya vākyāni), 9284 (vaṇigdharmā), 9285, 9287, 9318, 9319, 9320, 9321, (9323); 263, 9339, 9342, (9344); 264, (9399), (9436), 9441; 265, (9442), 9462, 9463, 9465 (discourse between T. and Jājali).

[Tulādhāra-Jājali-saṃvāda(ḥ)] ("the conversation of Tulādhāra with Jājali"). § 680*b* (Mokshadh.). Bhīshma said: There was once a brahman Jājali, living in a forest; he proceeded to the sea-shore and practised penances (description) for many years. Living within the waters he roamed through all the worlds with the speed of mind. Once, unseen by Ra., he thought: "there is none equal to me"; Pç. said to him that even the celebrated Tulādhāra

(engaged in buying and selling) was not worthy of saying such words. Ṛ. wished to see Tulādhāra; Ra. raised him from the sea and showed him the road. Arrived at Vārāṇasī, he met Tulādhāra and spoke to him thus (!). Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Bhīshma described those difficult feats that Jājali had performed before; while he stood as a wooden post rapt in yoga, a pair of kuliṅga birds (caṭakān, v. 9317) built their nest on his head, laid their eggs there, their young ones came out, and only when the latter did not come back, even after a month, Jājali left that spot. Then he began to slap his armpits and proclaim loudly: "I have won great merit." Then an invisible voice in the sky said: "Thou art not equal to the wise Tulādhāra at Vārāṇasī; even he is not fit to say what thou sayest." Jājali, filled with wrath and desirous of meeting with Tulādhāra, began to roam over the whole earth, observing the vow of silence and passing the night at that spot where evening overtook him. After a considerable time he reached Vārāṇasī and saw Tulādhāra engaged in selling miscellaneous articles (paṇyāni). Tulādhāra stood up and saluted him, mentioning his dealings with the birds, etc. (XII, 262). Asked by Jājali, the vaiçya Tulādhāra discoursed to him upon the ways of morality; "in every creature that is endued with the five senses live all the deities, Sūrya, etc. (a); the goat is Agni; the sheep is Varuṇa; the horse is Sūrya; Earth is Virāj; the cow and the calf are Soma; the man that sells these can never obtain success . . . In days of yore many Ṛ. (and Yatis) rebuked Nahusha for having slain a cow (which is declared in the scriptures to be like unto one's mother) and a bull (which is declared to be like to the Creator himself); in order to purify Nahusha, however, they divided that sin in 101 parts, and converting the fragments into diseases, threw them among all creatures, but declared that they should not be able to pour libations in his sacrifice" (XIII, 263). Jājali said that Tulādhāra's doctrines smacked of atheism, which the latter denied, discoursing on sacrifice, saying that brahmans, having given up the sacrifice ordained for them (i.e. Yoga), had betaken themselves to the performance of sacrifices that are for kshatriyas (i.e. all other sacrifices). "Instead of all animals the rice-ball is a worthy offering in sacrifices; all rivers are as sacred as the Sarasvatī, and all mountains are sacred; the soul is itself a tīrtha; do not wander about on the earth to visit sacred places" (XII, 264). Tulādhāra caused Jājali to summon the birds that had been reared by the latter; they made answer agreeably to the religion of ahiṃsā (Nīl.). "Faith is the daughter of Sūrya, etc.," quoting a verse sung by Brahmán, exalting Faith; "the food of a liberal usurer is acceptable, but not the food of a miser; . . . want of faith is a high sin; faith is a cleanser of sins." After a short while, Tulādhāra and Jājali both ascended to heaven. Many truths of this kind were spoken of by Tulādhāra; Jājali, having heard his words, betook himself to tranquillity (XII, 265).

Udapāna, one or more tīrthas. § 370 (Tīrthayātrāp.): III, 84, 8088.—§ 615*b* (Baladevatīrthayātrā): Although the Sarasvatī seems to be lost there, yet, owing to the succulence of the herbs and the moistness of the land, holy persons know [that] the river [has an invisible current there] (IX, 35). There the great ascetic Trita had lived and drunk soma in a pit, where his two brothers had left him, and therefore were cursed by him. Requested by Janamejaya Vaiçampāyana related: In a former yuga there were three brothers who were ascetics: Ekata, Dvita, and Trita, like to Prajāpati, having by their tapas won Brahmaloka (Brahmalokajitaḥ), and being blessed with children. At last their father Gautama died, having passed a long life here. Those kings who had been his yajamānas continued to pay respect to his sons. Once, thinking of performing a sacrifice and having received animals from their yajamānas, those maharshis came towards the east. Trita was walking in front, Ekata and Dvita in his rear, bringing up the animals. Ekata and Dvita thought of taking the kine away and deserting Trita. In the night they saw a wolf. Trita ran in fright and fell into a deep pit on the bank of the Sarasvatī. Though hearing his wails of woe, his brothers deserted him. Trita feared to die because he had not earned the merit of drinking soma, and in imagination performed a sacrifice, himself being the hotṛ and uttering the ṛces, yajushes, and sāmans (description). Bṛhaspati prevailed upon the gods to go there lest Trita should become angry and create other gods. Trita duly gave them their shares with proper mantras; they granted him boons: that the gods should deliver him [from the well], and that he who bathes in that well shall have the end which is attained by persons who have drunk soma. At these words the Sarasvatī, with her waves, appeared within that well. Raised aloft by her, Trita emerged and worshipped the gods. Meeting his brothers he cursed them, saying that they should become wolves and have for offspring leopards and bears and apes (IX, 36): IX, 35, 2062 (on the Sarasvatī); 36, 2064, 2068, 2093 (?).—§ 615 (Baladevatīrthayātrā): IX, 36, 2118.

[Ulūkadūtāgamanaparvan(°va)] ("the section relating to Ulūka's arrival as an ambassador," the 64th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Ulūkadūtāgamana). § 571. When the Pāṇḍavas had encamped on the bank of the Hiraṇvatī, the Kauravas also fixed their encampment. Then Duryodhana consulted with Karṇa, etc. (a), and sent Ulūka to the Pāṇḍavas and Somakas in order to irritate them still more, with insulting messages to Yudhishṭhira (the story of the wicked cat), Kṛshṇa, etc. (β); before Arjuna he should mention the Kāmbojas, etc. (γ), among his troops; "I know that the Gāṇḍīva is full 6 cubits long" (V, 160). Ulūka repeated the messages to the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (V, 161), and repeated his words to Arjuna once more; Bhīmasena and the rest became furious; Kṛshṇa counselled Ulūka to retire in time; Ulūka once more repeated his words; they became still more enraged, especially Bhīma, who said that he would certainly drink Duḥçāsana's blood; also Sahadeva, etc. (δ), gave him answers for Duryodhana; Sahadeva would slay Ulūka before the eyes of Çakuni, and then Çakuni himself (V, 162). Arjuna said that Duryodhana's contrivance of seeking cover behind Bhīshma would be of no avail, as he would himself slay Bhīshma; the same said Çikhaṇḍin ("I have been created by the Creator for the destruction of Bhīshma"); Dhṛshṭadyumna would slay Droṇa with all his followers and friends. Ulūka related it all to Duryodhana. Messengers instructed by Karṇa promulgated: "array tomorrow before sunrise" (V, 163). Dhṛshṭadyumna began to select combatants in order to pit them against particular warriors of the hostile force (ϵ) (V, 164).

Kṛshṇacchavisamā (IV, 187), Kṛshṇapiṅgalā (VI, 796), Kumārī (IV, 184; VI, 796), Mahādevī (IV, 200; VI, 805), Mahākālī (IV, 195; VI, 797), Mahishāsuranāçinī (IV, 193), Mandaravāsinī (VI, 796), Pītavāsinī (VI, 800), Sāvitrī (VI, 804), Skandamātṛ (VI, 803), Siddhasenānī (VI, 796), Tāriṇī, Varavarṇinī (VI, 797), Vijayā (IV, 194; VI, 798), Virūpākshī (VI, 801).

Umā[2] = Sarasvatī: IX, 2389.

Umādhava, Umākānta = Çiva (1000 names[2]).

[Umā-Maheçvara-saṃvāda] ("the discourse between Umā and Çiva"). § 768*b* (Ānuçāsanik.): Nārada said: Once, Çiva on Himavat, the resort of Si. and Cā., practised severe penances, surrounded by Aps., etc. (a) (copious descriptions). Then came Umā (description) and with her hands covered the eyes of Çiva from behind, and darkness arose all around; but suddenly the darkness disappeared: a third eye appeared on his forehead and consumed the mountain; Umā stood before him with her hands joined; he directed benignant looks towards the mountain, which, in a moment, was restored to its former condition. Umā asked why his eastern, northern, and western faces are so handsome, and the southern so terrible (1); why his matted locks are tawny and erect (2); why his throat is blue (3); why he has always the Pināka in his hand (4); why he is always a brahmacārin with matted locks (5). Çiva promised to explain it to her (XIII, 140). Çiva answered the above questions (1): "In days of yore Tilottamā, created by Brahmán (cf. I, ch. 211), circumambulated me; in whatever direction she turned, a new face of mine appeared through my yoga-power; with my eastern face I exercise the sovereignty of the universe; with my northern I sport with thee (i.e. Umā); with my western I ordain the happiness of creatures; with my southern I destroy all creatures. (2 and 5): In order to do good to all creatures. (3): In days of yore, Indra, desirous of acquiring my prosperity hurled his thunderbolt at me, which scorched my throat. (4): In order to accomplish the purposes of the gods." Umā: Why hast thou selected a bull for thy vehicle? Çiva: In days of yore, Brahmán created Surabhi (the celestial cow); once, froth fell from one of her calves on my body; my wrath scorched all the kine which became diversified in hue; Brahmán pacified me and gave me this bull both as a vehicle and as a device. Umā: Why dost thou reside in the cemetery (description), abandoning thy many abodes in heaven? Çiva: I do not see any spot that is more sacred than the cemetery, and my Bhūtas love to reside in such spots. Umā: What are the indications of dharma? Çiva: Abstention from injury, etc. Umā: What are the duties of the four castes? Çiva enumerated them. Umā: What are the common duties of all the castes? Çiva: Whenever the world is created, three eternal religions are created by Brahmán: the Veda, the smṛti, and the practice of the righteous, etc.; there are four classes of bhikshus: kuṭīcaka, bahūdaka, haṃsa, and paramahaṃsa (each in turn being superior to the preceding one; v. Nīl.). Umā: What is the religion of the ṛshis (munis)? Çiva: (1) the Phenapas always gather the froth from the amṛta that Brahmán drank at a great sacrifice. (2) The Vālakhilyas in the solar disc, adopting the practice of the birds, live by picking up grains (uñcha), clad in deer-skins or bark of trees; they are only as big as the joint of the thumb; they have burnt all their sins by severe penances. (3) The Cakracaras in the Somaloka, near to Pitṛloka, live by gleaning [differently Nīl.], devoted to compassion. (4) The Samprakshālas, Açmakuṭṭas, and Dantolūkhalikas [v. Nīl. and the note of PCR., p. 642], near the gods [called] Somapas and Ūshmapas (C. U°), live by gleaning ["drinking the rays of Soma," PCR.], together with their wives, etc. (Çiva copiously described the religion of the Ṛ. in general) (XIII, 141). Umā: What is the religion of the Vānaprasthas? Çiva described it (vīrāsana, maṇḍūka-yoga, paurṇamāsya, cāturmāsya, etc.); they attain to Brahmaloka or Somaloka. Umā: What is the religion of the munis (munisaṅghasya) in their doctrines of perfection (siddhivādeshu; i.e. jñānagoshṭhīshu, Nīl.; "followers of the scriptures treating of ascetic success," PCR.)? they live unrestrained in the forest, together with their wives. Çiva: Their characteristics are the shaving of the head, yellow robes, passing the night at home, ablutions three times a day, hotra, samādhi, adherence to the path of the good, etc. All those duties of which I have spoken before as belonging to forest-recluses, are the duties of these also, etc. (copious description). Asked by Umā, Çiva said: By fasts, etc., one attains to heaven and sports with G.; by maṇḍūkayoga and dīkshā with the Nāgas; by living with deer, etc., one attains to Amarāvatī; by subsisting upon air or water, fruits and roots, one attains to the riches of Y. and sports with Aps.; by abandoning one's body in the ocean, having lived in dependence only of himself, etc., one attains to the world of Varuṇa; by the same practices and piercing one's feet with a stone, one rejoices with the Gh., others obtain Brahmaloka (having abandoned their bodies in fire as an oblation to the gods), Çakraloka, etc. (XIII, 142). Asked by Umā, Çiva expounded the circumstances under which one may be promoted or degraded to a higher or lower order when reborn (XIII, 143). Asked by Umā, Çiva (worshipped by D. and As.) discoursed as to how men succeed in ascending to heaven, and what words, thoughts, and acts are of importance in this respect and for acquiring a long life. "This is the way that was indicated by Brahmán himself" (XIII, 144). Asked by Umā, Çiva discoursed about that conduct by which a man may attain to heaven (Aps., the woods of Nandana), quoting Brahmán; the unmerciful, etc., sink into hell; they who humiliate their preceptors and seniors are reborn as Çvapākas and Pukkasas. Then (asked by Umā) he explained why some men become possessed of wisdom or the contrary, blind, diseased, etc.; what acts are faulty, and what faultless; why some are observant of vows, some like Rā. (Brahmarākshasas) in conduct, unmindful of homa and vashaṭkāra (XIII, 145). Nārada said: Now Çiva himself became desirous of hearing. Saying that Umā (acquainted with all duties, etc.) used to converse every day with Sāvitrī, etc. (γ), who all regard their husbands as their gods, he questioned Umā about the duties of women; "half of my body is made up of half thy body; thou . . . art the cause of the peopling of the earth." Umā said she would first consult the rivers, who, with the waters of all tīrthas, are approaching Çiva in order to enable him to perform his ablutions: Sarasvatī (the first of all streams), going to the ocean, etc. (δ). Gaṅgā was selected for answering the question, and praised Umā's modesty; then Umā discoursed upon the duties of women in full. She should not cast her eyes on the moon or the sun or a tree that has a masculine name. The husband is the god of the woman. If a husband being poor, or diseased, or distressed, etc., were to command his wife to accomplish anything improper or unrighteous, the wife should, without hesitation, do so according to the practice allowable in time of distress, and she becomes entitled to a share in the merit acquired by her husband. Nārada said: Çiva applauded Umā and dismissed the others; Bh., etc. (ε), returned home (XIII, 146). Asked by Ṛ., Çiva discoursed on the glory of Vāsudeva, i.e. Kṛshṇa, q.v. (XIII, 147). Nārada said: At the conclusion of Çiva's speech loud roars were heard in the firmament, etc. Some of Ṛ. set out on a tīrthayātrā, others returned whence they came.

uñchavṛtti ("one who lives by gleaning"): III, 15407 (çilo°); XII, 13918 (°vrate); XIV, 2695 foll.

[Uñchavṛtty-upākhyāna(ṃ)] ("the episode relating to the gleaner"). § 718*b* (Mokshadh.): Bhīshma said: M-ṛ Nārada wanders through all the worlds like Vāyu, not obstructed by anything; once he repaired to the abode of Indra, who asked him if he had perceived any wonderful incident. Nārada recited the following story (XII, 353): In the town of Mahāpadma, on the southern bank of the Gaṅgā, there lived a brahman of the Soma-lineage (Somānvaye, i.e. Atrigotre, Nīl.), endued with amiability, etc.; he was in great trouble with regard to the value of following the ordinances of the Vedas, or the [Dharma]çāstras, or the duties that eminent men of former times have performed (çishṭācīrṇa). Then there came to him a wise brahman as a guest (XII, 354); him he asked what he, having entrusted his duties as a householder to his son, should do in order to perform the highest duty of men, as he had no respect for the religion of the Yatis, who depend upon alms. The guest said that he was himself perplexed, as heaven had many doors (examples) (XII, 355); he told him (according to what he learnt from his preceptor) to repair to Padma, the righteous Nāga, who lived in the city called after the Nāgas in the Naimisha forest, on the banks of the Gomatī, whence, in a former creation (pūrvābhisarge) the wheel of righteousness was set in motion (dharmacakraṃ pravartitaṃ), and where all the gods had, in days of old, performed a great sacrifice, and where king Māndhātṛ neglected (atikramañ cakre) Indra (XII, 356). The host became delighted, and passed the night happily conversing with his guest about the fourth mode of life (caturthadharma) [i.e. sannyāsa, renunciation, PCR.; =mokshadharma, Nīl.]; the next morning, having dismissed his guest, he set out for the abode of the Nāga (XII, 357), was shown the way by an ascetic, and received by the beautiful wife of the Nāga; as the Nāga had gone to draw the chariot of Sūrya for a month, and would be back in seven or eight days, he passed this time on the banks of the Gomatī (XII, 358). On the 6th day the Nāgas of the city, seeing him abstaining from food and [only] reciting mantras, came and asked him to eat; but he wanted to keep his fast for eight days; if then the Nāga-chief had not come back, he would break his fast. Then the Nāgas returned (XII, 359). When the Nāga-chief came home, he was informed by his wife about the brahman's arrival (XII, 360). The Nāga doubted whether that brahman was a human being, as the Nāgas, even by D., As., and D-ṛ, are considered to be endued with great energy; his wife told him to go and speak to the guest without the wrath which is natural to Nāgas; the Nāga himself also blamed wrath, citing Rāvaṇa (who became the rival of Çakra and was slain by Rāma) and the sons of Kārtavīrya (who were slain by Rāma Jāmadagnya) and Kārtavīrya himself (XII, 361). The Nāga met with the brahman (who characterized himself as a righteous being (dharmāraṇya = muni, Nīl.)) on the banks of the Gomatī, engaged in Yoga and reciting the Vedas in order to dispel all evil from the Nāga (XII, 362); he asked the Nāga whether he had seen anything wonderful in those regions where he had drawn the one-wheeled chariot of Vivasvat. The Nāga described the wonders of which the Sun is the source (a). The most wonderful was that one day, in former times, at the hour of noon, a being came through the sky like a second sun and entered Sūrya (XII, 363). Sūrya declared it to be a brahman, who had attained to heaven on account of his having been crowned with success (siddhaḥ) in the gleaning-vow (uñchavṛttivrate) (description), and because he had gratified Bhava (Çiva) by praising him with saṃhitāḥ, and now he "goes round the earth staying in the disc of Sūrya; neither D., nor G., As., nor Pn. are superior to those creatures that attain to this excellent end" (XII, 364). The brahman then betook himself formally to the practice of the uñcha-vow (XII, 365), and having saluted the Nāga, he went to Cyavana Bhārgava, who initiated him and recited the story of the brahman in king Janaka's palace to D-ṛ Nārada > Indra > the foremost brahmans. "During my (i.e. Bhīshma's) battle with Rāma, the Vasus told it to me." The brahman proceeded to another forest (XII, 366).

was sent to look after the kine. His master forbade him to enjoy the alms he received before he had offered it to him; then, being deprived by the master of the whole alms, and forbidden to go begging a second time, or to drink of the milk of the cows, or the froth that the calves threw out when sucking, he ate of the leaves of the arka plant (asclepias gigantea), whence he became blind and fell into a pit. Āyoda Dhaumya told U. to glorify the Açvins, which he did; they gave him a cake which he would not apply without offering it to his preceptor, though the latter had himself formerly obtained a similar cake without offering it to his preceptor. The Açvins gave him teeth of gold, while those of his preceptor were of iron, and restored him to sight: I, 3, ††697, ††698, ††700, ††704, ††708, ††711, ††717, ††718, ††721, ††739.

Upamanyu[2], Vaiyāghrapadya (°pāda C.), a ṛshi. § 730 (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 14, 634 (Vaiyāghrapādasya (°padya°, B.)), 655 (Kṛshṇa came to the hermitage of U., who advised him to gratify Çiva, whose granting of boons he described).—§ 730*g* (do.): Upamanyu said: In the Kṛtayuga there was a ṛshi named Vyāghrapāda. I was born as his son and Dhaumya as my younger brother. Accompanied by Dhaumya, I once came to the hermitage of certain ṛshis. There I saw milk, which appeared to me to be like to amṛta. Coming home, I asked my mother to give me some food prepared with milk. Having no milk my mother was sorry. She then took a cake (of rice) and boiled it into water and placed it before me, saying that it was milk. Knowing the nature of milk, I understood that this was not milk; this I said to my mother, who then answered me that ascetics in the wood could not have milk. "Whence shall we, who live at the river, the resort of the Vālakhilyas, obtain milk? In the wilderness are no offspring of Surabhī." Then she told me to devote myself to Çaṅkara (i.e. Çiva). Questioned by me about Çiva my mother then, in accordance with the discourses of the munis, described the diverse forms of Mahādeva (i.e. Çiva) (η). I then applied myself to the practice of penances in order to gratify Çiva. After a thousand celestial years Mahādeva appeared to me in the form of Çakra (i.e. Indra) riding on his elephant, but I did not desire a boon from any other deity than Mahādeva. Questioned by Indra about the reason, I stated Çiva to be the existent and the non-existent, the manifest and the unmanifest, the eternal and immutable, etc., and that there was nothing superior to Çiva (θ). Mahādeva resides in the worlds named Bhū, etc. (ι). In all the encounters of the gods, etc. (κ), Bhava restores power to those who meet with destruction. It is Maheçvara who made futile the boons given to Andhaka, etc. (λ). He is adored by yogins, etc. (μ). Brahmán, etc. (ν), always say that there is none higher than Mahādeva. His sign (liṅga) is worshipped by Brahmán, etc. The creatures bear only the signs of Mahādeva and his spouse, and those of Brahmán, etc. (ο). "I shall never acknowledge any other deity. Nor would I take the fulfilment of all my wishes from any other deity." When I had finished this speech, the celestial elephant became transformed into a white bull (description), on the back of which Mahādeva, with Umā, was seated (description of Çiva and his weapons: Pināka (π)). The Pāçupata weapon is superior to all other weapons such as the Brāhma, etc. (ρ), but the çūla (σ) is even superior. Çiva was also armed with the battle-axe, which he had given to Rāma Jāmadagnya (τ). He was surrounded by Brahmán, etc. (υ). The deities praised Çiva by uttering diverse hymns (φ). "I then praised him with a hymn (χ) and offered him arghya (water). Çiva became gratified and granted me the fulfilment of all my wishes. I once more praised him (ψ) and asked that I and my kinsmen and friends might always eat food with milk. Çiva granted this, and that after the expiration of a kalpa I should obtain the companionship of Çiva. Then the god disappeared": XIII, 14, (784), (880), 928, 932.—§ 730 (do.): XIII, 14, (964); 15, 1034, (1036); 16, (1037), (1104), (1109); 17, (1115); 18, 1358 (U. taught Kṛshṇa certain mantras by which he succeeded in seeing Çiva, U. afterwards recited to Kṛshṇa the 1000 names of Çiva, which had been communicated to him by Taṇḍi).

Uparicara = Vasu, the Cedi king. § 3 (Anukram.): I, 1, 52 (some read the Mhbhr. beginning from U., i.e. v. 2334).—§ 73 (Vasu): I, 63, 2334 (rājo°aḥ).—§ 75 (do.): I, 63, 2367 (do.).—§ 76 (Matsya): I, 63, 2392 (do.).—§ 267 (Yamasabhāv.): II, 8, 331 (do., in the palace of Yama).—§ 717*c* (Nārāyaṇīya): Bhīshma said: There was, in times past, a king named U., the friend of Indra, and devoted to Hari Nārāyaṇa; he won the sovereignty of the world in consequence of a boon he had obtained from Nārāyaṇa, and used to worship him with the Sātvata ritual (Sātvatānāṃ Pāñcarātrāṇāṃ hitaṃ, Nīl.), revealed in days of yore by Sūrya himself, etc. Indra gave him a share in his own seat and bed. The foremost of those conversant with the Pāñcarātra (Pāñcarātravidaḥ) dwelled in his palaces. The seven ṛshis (β), named the Citraçikhaṇḍins, uniting together, had on Meru promulgated an excellent treatise on duties; they were the seven prakṛtis (i.e. mahat, ahaṅkāra, etc., Nīl.), and [Manu] Svāyambhuva was the eighth (i.e. original Prakṛti, Nīl.); they composed that treatise after having worshipped with penances Hari Nārāyaṇa for 1,000 celestial years, together with many other ṛshis; Nārāyaṇa ordered Sarasvatī to enter into the persons of these ṛshis and became highly pleased with the treatise, which was in accordance with the Vedas, etc. (γ). Nārāyaṇa said: "According to the authority of the scriptures I have created Brahmán from grace, Rudra from my wrath, and yourselves as representing the prakṛti-elements. Sūrya, etc. (δ) live and act in their respective spheres; guided by your treatise Manu Svāyambhuva will declare the duties to the world, and so will Uçanas and Bṛhaspati, when they will arise; then this science will be acquired by king Vasu [Uparicara] from Bṛhaspati; upon the death of that king this eternal treatise will disappear from the world." Then Nārāyaṇa disappeared. Subsequently, when Bṛhaspati was born in the Aṅgiras race in the Kṛta age, those seven ṛshis charged him with the task of promulgating their treatise, which was consistent with the Upanishads and the branches of the Vedas. Then they proceeded to the place they chose for practising penances (XII, 336). Etymology of the name Bṛhaspati. King Vasu Uparicara became the foremost of Bṛhaspati's disciples, and studied at his feet that science of the Citraçikhaṇḍins. In his horse-sacrifice Bṛhaspati became the hotṛ, the sons of Prajāpati, viz. Ekata, Dvita, and Trita, the sadasyas, together with Dhanusha, etc. (ε); no animals were slain in it; Hari became gratified and came and took his share, visible to Vasu, but invisible to the others. At this Bṛhaspati became angry and hurled the sacrificial ladle with violence into the skies, saying: "Here I place this as Nārāyaṇa's share, he shall take it before my eyes." Yudhishṭhira asked why Hari only took his share invisibly. Bhīshma answered: King Vasu and his sadasyas sought to pacify Bṛhaspati, saying that none should feel anger in this Kṛta age, as Hari himself did not feel anger, and none could see him save he to whom he became gracious. Then the ṛshis, Ekata, Dvita, and Trita (the mindborn sons of Brahmán) narrated that they had once undergone penances for thousands of years, to the north of Meru and on the shores of the milky ocean in order to behold Nārāyaṇa in his own form, then an incorporeal voice directed them to Çvetadvīpa on the northern shore of the milky ocean; the inhabitants there are devoted to Nārāyaṇa, etc. (description) and adore only one god. Arrived there they could see nothing, blinded by the splendour of the deity; they then, once more, set themselves to practise austerities for 100 years, then they beheld the inhabitants (description, they are conversant with the ordinances of the Pāñcarātra). An incorporeal being addressed them from the sky, saying that the god could only be seen by these white men, etc.: "do ye return, after the expiration of this Kṛta age when the Tretā age comes (in the Vaivasvata manvantara) a great calamity will overtake the worlds, you shall then have to become the allies of the gods." Then Ekata, etc., returned. Hearing this Bṛhaspati brought the sacrifice to completion. King U. ruled his subjects righteously, and at last, giving up his body, ascended to heaven. After some time he, through the curse of the brahmans, fell down and sank deep into the earth; but even then he, by reciting sacred mantras having Nārāyaṇa for their deity, once more ascended to heaven through the grace of Nārāyaṇa (XII, 337). Yudhishṭhira asked why king Vasu, who was so devoted to Nārāyaṇa, did fall from heaven and sink beneath the surface of the earth. Bhīshma cited the old narrative of a discourse between the ṛshis and the gods. The gods once said to some brahmans that sacrifices should be performed by offering goats (aja). The ṛshis declared that, according to a Vedic çruti, by aja was to be understood seeds; "how can animals be slain in the Kṛta age?" Vasu was coming through the skies with his troops, etc., and was asked to be their judge. Having first ascertained what opinion was entertained by each of them, Vasu, moved by partiality for the gods, said that sacrifices should be performed with animals. The ṛshis became very angry, and cursed him to fall down from heaven and sink below the surface of the earth. He immediately fell, but at the command of Nārāyaṇa, Vasu's memory did not leave him. The gods came to his hole and said that he should have the vasor dhārā (v. the note of PCR., p. 758) for his sustenance as long as he remained there. Then the gods and the ṛshis went away. Vasu began to adore Hari and to recite in silence those sacred mantras which had come out of Nārāyaṇa's mouth in days of yore, and worshipped him in the five sacrifices which are performed five times every day. Hari Nārāyaṇa (Vishṇu) then let Garuḍa take Vasu to Brahmaloka (XII, 338): XII, 336, 12712 (rājo°ḥ); 337, 12754 (rājo°o Vasuḥ), 12766; 338, 12834 (rājo°ḥ), 12838 (rājo°ṃ (!)), 12855 (rājo°ḥ).

Then Atri [the father of Soma] invited U. and gave her to him. Varuṇa had coveted the girl from former times; he came to the forest and stole her away, when she bathed in the Yamunā, and carried her to his wonderful city, adorned with 600,000 lakes (read °çata° with B.) with palaces and Apsarases, etc. Having heard all this from Nārada, U. caused him to request Varuṇa to restore her ("thou art a Lokapāla, not a destroyer of the world"). As Varuṇa refused, and Nārada related to U. that Varuṇa had seized him by the throat and driven him from his house, U. (Aṅgiras) stopped the waters and drank them off, and caused the earth to dry up the 600,000 lakes, and the Sarasvatī to become invisible, and the region to cease to be sacred. Then Varuṇa restored Bhadrā to U., who then freed the world and Varuṇa from distress. Uttaṅka (so B., C. mostly Uta°), a ṛshi. § 11 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 364.—§ 17 (cf. Paushyap.): U. was the disciple of Veda; having resisted the temptations of the wife of Veda, he obtained leave to depart, but first wished to bring Veda some gratuity for his instruction, and having uttered this wish two times, he was ordered to procure the ear-rings of Paushya's queen for the wife of Veda. Having met with a bull (Airāvata) and a man (Indra) mounted upon it, he ate of the dung and drank of the urine (amṛta) of that bull, "as his master had formerly done." Coming to the abode of Paushya, he could not discover the queen before he had purified himself properly from the leavings of his last meal. He and Paushya cursed one another. Having obtained the ear-rings, U. returned to his master. On the road Takshaka, the king of the serpents, in the shape of a mendicant, stole the ear-rings and proceeded to Nāgaloka. Indra, with the thunderbolt, made a hole through which U. entered the Nāgaloka, where he hymned the serpents. He there saw two damsels (= Dhātṛ and Vidhātṛ) sitting over a loom, weaving a fabric with black and white threads (night and day), further, he saw a wheel (= the year) with twelve spokes (= the months) turned by six boys (= the seasons), and then a man (Parjanya) mounted on a horse (Agni). At the injunction of the man U. blew into the anus of the horse, whence there issued flames of fire with smoke, which were about to consume the Nāgaloka. Takshaka then gave back the ear-rings and U. was borne by the horse to his master's abode. His master explained to him all he had seen during his journey. U. then proceeded to Hāstinapura and told Janamejaya, who had some time before returned victorious from Takshaçilā, to burn Takshaka, who had bitten Parikshit to death, and caused Kāçyapa to turn back without relieving Parikshit, at a snake-sacrifice: I, 3, ††747 (°nāmānaṃ), ††748, ††749, ††753, ††756, ††757 (Utta° also C.), ††758, ††759, ††761, ††762, ††763, ††764, ††765, ††770, ††771, ††772, ††773, ††776, ††778, ††779, ††780, ††787, ††789, ††790, ††791, ††793, ††796, ††805, ††815, ††816, ††818, ††819, ††820, ††821, ††822, ††823, ††832, 833, (836), (840), 848, 849, 850.—§ 56 (Parikshit): I, 50, 1991 (ṛsher U°sya, sc. parābhavaṃ, all. to § 17).—§ 57 (Janamejaya): I, 50, 2014 (°sya priyaṃ kartuṃ, do.).—§ 474b (Dhundhumārop.): III, 201, 13491 (maharshiḥ), 13492, (13494), 13504, (13505), 13507 (gratified Vishṇu who granted him boons).—§ 476 (do.): III, 202, 13523, 13524, (13525); 203, 13546, 13550 (U. urged Bṛhadaçva to slay Dhundhu, but Bṛhadaçva directed him to Kuvalāçva).—§ 478 (do.): III, 204, 13589 (°āçramaṃ), 13591 (°āçramābhyāse, there Dhundhu had his abode), 13592, 13594, 13619 (U. accompanied Kuvalāçva when he set out to slay Dhundhu).—§ 784b (Anugītāp.): When Kṛshṇa, on his way from Hāstinapura to Dvārakā, had entered the desert, he beheld U., who enquired whether he came after having reconciled the Kurus and the Pāṇḍavas. Kṛshṇa told him the matter; filled with wrath U. threatened to curse him; Kṛshṇa warned U. (who had practised brahmacarya from the day of his infancy) against destroying his penances [by a curse] (XIV, 53). U. agreed that Kṛshṇa should first tell him "that faultless adhyātma", and Kṛshṇa explained his own identity with the creator and destroyer of all things. "R., V., Dai., Y., G., Rā., N., and Aps. have sprung from me; etc. Dharma, whose essence is compassion for all creatures, is my eldest-born offspring, and has sprung from my mind; I am Vishṇu, Brahmán, and Çakra (i.e. Indra)." He always acts as those beings in whose order he lives (XIV, 54). U. prevailed upon Kṛshṇa to show him his eternal Vaishṇava or universal form, and praised Kṛshṇa, who granted him the boon to have water wherever he wished for it (water being scarce in such deserts) by thinking of Kṛshṇa. Once, when U. was wandering thirsty in the desert, and thought of Kṛshṇa, he saw a naked Cāṇḍāla (mātaṅga) all besmeared with dirt, surrounded by a pack of dogs, and carrying a sword, and bow, and arrows; from his urinary organs there issued copious streams of water; he invited U. to accept this water; U. refused and even censured Kṛshṇa, the Cāṇḍāla disappeared. Kṛshṇa came and said that the Cāṇḍāla was Indra, whom he had ordered to give amṛta to U. in the form of water, and that Indra at first had refused to do it, but at last had agreed on the condition that U. should accept it in that way. Kṛshṇa ordained that on those days in which U. would feel a desire for water, there should rise clouds raining savoury water over this desert and that they should be named U.-clouds; even to this day such clouds shower rain on the arid desert (XIV, 55). Asked by Janamejaya about the penances of U., Vaiçampāyana related that U.'s preceptor Gautama, having permitted thousands of disciples to return home, was so pleased with the devotion of U. that he would not dismiss him, even after 100 years, and decrepitude overtook U.; one day when he threw the load of fuel he had fetched on the earth, one of his matted locks, white as silver, had become entangled with the load and fell on the earth; beholding that sign of old age, U. gave himself up to loud lamentations; the beautiful daughter of his preceptor, at the command of her father, sought to hold the tears of U. in her hands, but her hands seemed to burn with the dropping tears, and she was obliged to let them fall on the earth; the earth was unable to hold them. Asked by Gautama, U. explained the matter. Gautama permitted him to leave him; as U. spoke of the fee, Gautama said that he was already highly gratified and that if U. became a young man of sixteen years, he would give him his daughter in marriage. U. again became a youth and accepted the maiden. As he spoke of the fee to his preceptor's wife, Ahalyā said that she was already gratified. U., however, insisted, and Ahalyā then commanded him to bring her the celestial ear-rings which were borne by the wife of Saudāsa, who had [through the curse of Çaktri] become a cannibal. Gautama blamed Ahalyā that she had sent U. to the cannibal. Ahalyā said that she had done it unknowingly, and that Gautama would protect U. U. met Saudāsa in a deserted forest (XIV, 56). Saudāsa was of frightful mien, wearing a long beard smeared with human blood, and looking like a second Yama; he congratulated himself that he had met U. at the sixth hour of the day when he was in search of food; U. maintained that while one is employed for the sake of his preceptor, one should not be injured; at last they agreed that when he had brought his preceptor the ear-rings he should come back; Saudāsa told U. to go and see the queen Madayantī (near a forest fountain), as he could not himself see her at the sixth hour. Madayantī told U. to bring her some sign from her husband, as these ear-rings, when placed on the earth, would be stolen by the Nāgas, if worn by one who is impure from eating, they would be taken away by the Yakshas, and if the wearer fell asleep, the gods would take them away; "also the maharshis and the Rākshasas watch for opportunities for carrying them away; they always produce gold and shine brightly at night; they protect against hunger, and thirst, and fear, and he who wears them grows in size" (XIV, 57). U. came back to Saudāsa, who gave him a sign. When he had got the ear-rings, U. once more came back to Saudāsa, and asked him about the meaning of the mystic words he had caused him to say to Madayantī, as a sign. Saudāsa, referring to his own terrible condition in consequence of his being cursed [by Çaktri], said that he hoped that this gift to a brahman might save him. U. asked Saudāsa to give him such advice as is approved by the wise: "is it proper for me to come back to thee or not?" Saudāsa said that he would then tell him never to come back. When U., on his way to Ahalyā, having bound the ear-rings in the folds of his black deerskin, had proceeded for some distance he became afflicted with hunger and climbed a bilva-tree (ægle marmelos), hanging his deerskin on a branch, while he plucked some fruits. Struck by some fruits the deerskin fell down, the knot was untied, and a serpent of Airāvata's race carried the ear-rings, holding them in his mouth, into an anthill. Filled with wrath, U. with his staff, pierced that anthill for thirty-five days, desirous of making a path to the nether regions; the goddess Earth became anxious; Indra came there in the disguise of a brahman afflicted with the sorrow of U., and told him that the regions of the Nāgas are thousands of yojanas distant; as U. did not desist, Indra united the latter's staff with his thunderbolt, and struck with the thunderbolt, the earth opened a way to the Nāgaloka (c). U. entered the Nāgaloka, very cheerless; then there appeared to him a black steed with a white tail, whose face and eyes were of coppery hue. He told U. to blow into his anus, "which thou often didst at the retreat of Gautama in former days"; the horse turned out to be Agni; U. did as he was directed, a thick smoke enveloped the Nāgaloka, the Nāgas, headed by Vāsuki, gave U. the ear-rings, which he brought to Ahalyā (XIV, 58): XIV, 53, 1542 (muniçreshṭhaṃ), 1544 (brāhmaṇaçreshṭhaḥ), 1555, (1556); 54, (1563); 55, (1586), (1593), 1596, 1599, 1600, 1601, 1604, 1608, 1610, 1612, 1614, 1623 (°meghāḥ), 1624 (do.); 56, 1625, 1626, 1628, 1630, 1632, 1638 (vipraṃ), (1640), (1645), 1653, 1656, 1657, 1660; 57, (1664), (1666), (1673), (1675), 1676, (1678), 1680, 1681; 58, 1692, (1699), (1701), 1721, (1723), 1730, 1734, 1737, 1746, 1750.—§ 784 (do.): XIV, 59, 1751, 1752. Vaivāhika, adj. ("relating to marriage"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 314 (sc. parva, i.e. Vaivāhikaparvan[1]).—§ 11 (do.): I, 2, 362 (do., do.).

[Vaivāhikaparvan[1]] ("the section relating to the marriage of Draupadī with the Pāṇḍavas", the 13th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). (Cf. Vaivāhika.) § 237. Dhṛshṭadyumna related what had happened: (Arjuna had large red eyes, v. 7175, and Kṛshṇā had followed him, catching hold of his deerskin, v. 7177); from their conversation on military subjects, he concluded that they were the Pāṇḍavas, of whom it had been heard that they had all escaped from the lac-house. Drupada (= Saumaki, v. 7198) sent his purohita to Yudhishṭhira, who said that there was no occasion for Drupada to grieve for his daughter. While Yudhishṭhira was saying this, another messenger from Drupada announced that the feast was ready (I, 193). The Pāṇḍavas, with Kuntī and Kṛshṇā were conveyed to Drupada's palace. Drupada wished to ascertain to which caste they belonged, and had for that purpose made ready a large collection of various articles appertaining to different human occupations; after dinner they began to observe, with interest, the implements of war, wherefore Drupada and his son thought that they were of royal blood (I, 194). Yudhishṭhira told Drupada who they were. Drupada vowed to restore Yudhishṭhira to his kingdom. Yudhishṭhira told him that they would all marry Kṛshṇā, which Drupada considered to be contrary to morality. While they discoursed on this matter Vyāsa arrived (I, 195). Drupada consulted Vyāsa about the wedding of his daughter. Vyāsa desired to hear the opinion of each of them. Drupada regarded the practice of marrying one wife to five men as sinful, and so did Dhṛshṭadyumna. Yudhishṭhira thought it not to be sinful, because his heart, that never inclined to what was sinful, approved of it; "it is recorded in the Purāṇa that Jaṭilā Gautamī had married seven ṛshis, and a muni's daughter, born of a tree (Vārkshī [= Mārishā, BR.], see Hariv., v. 96 foll.) married the ten Pracetases"; moreover, their mother Kuntī had told them to enjoy her all. Kuntī was afraid that she would be guilty of a lie. Vyāsa said that Yudhishṭhira was right, and took Drupada apart (I, 196) and related to him Pañcendropākhyāna (§§ 238–239).—§ 240. Drupada then consented, as it had been ordained by the gods. Vyāsa declared that very day to be auspicious as the moon entered in conjunction with Pushya (Paushyaṃ yogam upaiti). Drupada and his son made preparations for the wedding, and Dhaumya, performing the usual rites, married Kṛshṇā to Yudhishṭhira, and then to his brothers on successive days. Draupadī regained her virginity every day after her previous marriage. Then Drupada gave to them various kinds of excellent wealth (I, 198). Drupada, after his alliance with the Pāṇḍavas, had all his fears dispelled. His ladies worshipped the feet of Kuntī. Kuntī pronounced a blessing upon Kṛshṇā. Kṛshṇa sent them costly presents (I, 199).

[Vaivāhikaparvan[2]] ("the section containing the marriage of Abhimanyu and Uttarā"; the 56th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). § 553. On the third day the five Pāṇḍavas, attired in white robes after a bath, etc., entered the palace of Virāṭa and took their seats on the thrones reserved for kings. Virāṭa rebuked Kaṅka (Yudhishṭhira) for this insolence; Arjuna praised Yudhishṭhira, saying that there was none like him, even amongst D., As., men, Rā., G., Y., Ku., or M.-U., and disclosed that he was Yudhishṭhira (b) (IV, 70). Asked by Virāṭa which of them then was Arjuna, etc., Arjuna pointed out Bhīma (β), Nakula, and Sahadeva (both beautiful and great warriors), Draupadī, and himself. Uttara spoke of Arjuna's prowess, and described each of them, especially Arjuna ("it was by him that Bhīshma, Droṇa, and Duryodhana were vanquished"). Virāṭa, thinking he had offended Yudhishṭhira, offered to bestow his daughter Uttarā on Arjuna, which was applauded by Uttara, and offered his whole kingdom, etc., to Yudhishṭhira. Arjuna accepted Uttarā as his daughter-in-law, saying that such an alliance between the Matsyas and the Bharatas was desirable (IV, 71). Asked by Virāṭa why he himself did not wish to accept his daughter as wife, Arjuna alleged that she had confided in him as her father, and people might entertain suspicions against her or him; by accepting her for Abhimanyu he attested her purity. Virāṭa approved of it, and Yudhishṭhira gave his assent; the latter sent invitations to Kṛshṇa, etc., and so did Virāṭa. The Pāṇḍavas took up their abode at Upaplavya. Arjuna brought over Abhimanyu and Kṛshṇa, and many Daçārhas from the Ānartta country. The Kāçi-king and Çaibya (friendly to Yudhishṭhira) came, each accompanied by an akshauhiṇī of troops; Yajñasena came there with the sons of Draupadī and Çikhaṇḍin, and Dhṛshṭadyumna came with an akshauhiṇī. All the kings that came there were lords of akshauhiṇīs and performers of sacrifices, etc. Then came Kṛshṇa (decked with garlands), Balarāma, etc., with Abhimanyu and his mother. And Indrasena, etc., having lived at Dvārakā for a whole year, came with the chariots of the Pāṇḍavas. In the train of Kṛshṇa came also 10,000 elephants, 100 thousands of horses, 100 millions of chariots, 100 milliards of foot soldiers, and innumerable Vṛshṇi, Andhaka, and Bhoja warriors. Kṛshṇa gave to each of the Pāṇḍavas numerous female slaves, etc. Then the nuptial festival set in (description). The matrons of the Matsyas were headed by Sudeshṇā; but Kṛshṇā was the foremost in beauty, etc. Virāṭa gave [as dowry] 7,000 horses and 200 elephants, and much wealth, and offered his kingdom, etc., to the Pāṇḍavas. Yudhishṭhira gave all the wealth that had been brought by Kṛshṇa, etc., to the brahmans (IV, 72).

[Vaivasvatopākhyāna(m)] ("story of Manu Vaivasvata"). § 457 (Mārk.). Requested by Yudhishṭhira, Mārkaṇḍeya said: The maharshi Manu, Vivasvat's son, equal to Prajāpati (i.e. Brahmán), excelled his father and grandfather in strength, etc. He practised austerities in Badarī, standing on one foot, etc., for 10,000 years. Once a small fish came to him on the banks of the Cīriṇī and asked his protection from the greater fishes. He first reared it in a water vessel, and as it grew larger, he carried it to a large tank, and thence into the Gaṅgā, and at last into the ocean. The fish, saying that the world was about to be destroyed, caused him to build a strong ship with a long rope and ascend it with the seven ṛshis and the seeds that were enumerated by the brahmans of old. The fish then appeared and was recognized by a horn, to which Manu tied the noose. And, while there was water everywhere, the fish dragged the boat through the flood for many years, until, advised by the fish, Manu tied the ship to the highest peak of Himavat, thence called Naubandhana. The fish told him that he was Brahmán, and caused Manu to create (again) by austerities all creatures with gods, Asuras, and men. This is the Mātsyakaṃ Purāṇaṃ (III, 187).

[Vāmadeva-carita(ṃ)] ("the history of Vāmadeva"). § 461 (Mārkaṇḍeyas.). As Yudhishṭhira wished to hear about the greatness of brahmans, Mārkaṇḍeya related: King Parikshit (B. Parīkshit), in Ayodhyā, of the race of Ikshvāku, was, in the forest, led far away by a deer, and by a tank met with a beautiful maiden, who came along singing. He married her after having given her the pledge not to let her see water, and having arrived at his capital he lived with her in privacy, and nobody could obtain any interview with him. His chief minister, having found out the matter, made an artificial forest, with a tank covered with a net of pearls, and showed it to the king. The king told his wife to plunge into this tank. She did so, and did not reappear. When the water had been baled out a frog was found. The king ordered all frogs to be slaughtered. Āyu, the king of the frogs, in the shape of an ascetic (quoting two çlokas: "Do not wish to kill the frogs, etc."), told him that the queen was his daughter Suçobhanā, who had deceived many kings. She was restored to the king, but Āyu cursed her, saying: "Thy offspring shall prove disrespectful to brahmans." Parikshit begot three sons on her: Çala, Dala, and Bala. Having installed Çala on the throne, Parikshit retired to the wood. One day, Çala, as he could not overtake a deer, forced his charioteer to indicate to him, to whom the Vāmya horses belonged. He borrowed them from the ṛshi Vāmadeva and caught the deer, but did not return them. After a month, Vāmadeva in vain sent his disciple Ātreya, and then came himself, and asked for the steeds. The king, saying that such horses were not fit for brahmans, in vain offered to give him two bulls, then four asses or four mules, and as he threatened to let him be killed, Vāmadeva, saying that brahmans could not be punished, let four Rākshasas slay him with their lances. Dala, whom the Ikshvākus installed on the throne, attempted to shoot Vāmadeva with a poisoned arrow, but shot his own son Çyenajit, and was unable to discharge another poisoned arrow. Then he gave way, and, advised by Vāmadeva, he touched his queen with the arrow and was thus purified of his sin. The queen obtained the boon from Vāmadeva, that she might prevail upon her husband that they both should serve the brahmans, and he be freed from his sin, and that Vāmadeva should think of their weal. The king became glad and restored the Vāmya horses (III, 192).

Asked by Yudhishṭhira Lomaça related: In the Kṛta yuga, when the primeval deity (Ādidevaḥ purātanaḥ) assumed the function of Yama, the creatures did not die, and multiplied to such a degree that the Earth sank 100 yojanas. She applied to Nārāyaṇa (= Vishṇu), who, in the shape of a boar with a single tusk (ekaçṛṅga), lifted her up by means of that. The gods, with the ṛshis, became afraid of the agitation produced, but learnt the matter from Brahmán, and with him they went to Nandana, there Vishṇu was sitting in the shape of a boar with Çrīvatsa on his breast, together with Suparṇa, and having seen him they returned home (III, 142).

Vāsishṭha(m) ("the episode relating to Vasishṭha"). § 11 (Parvas.): I, 2, 387 (°am ākhyanaṃ).—§ 223 (Caitrar.). Arjuna wished to hear about Vasishṭha. The Gandharva said: Vasishṭha is Brahmán's spiritual son and Arundhatī's husband; Kāma and Krodha, who cannot be vanquished even by the immortals, used to shampoo his feet. Though his wrath was excited by Viçvāmitra's offence, he did not yet exterminate the Kuçikas. Afflicted at the loss of his sons, he did not do any dreadful deed for the destruction of Viçvāmitra. He did not transgress Kṛtānta (Death) in order to bring back his lost children from the abode of Yama. It was by obtaining him that the Ikshvākus acquired this earth, and with him as their purohita, they performed many great sacrifices. "Therefore acquire a fit purohita" (I, 174). Arjuna wished to hear of the hostility between Viçvāmitra and Vasishṭha. The Gandharva said: This old (purāṇa) story of Vasishṭha they tell in all worlds. In Kānyakubja king Gādhi, son of Kuçika, had a son Viçvāmitra, who, with his ministers, used to go a hunting. Once he arrived at the hermitage of Vasishṭha, who offered him arghya, etc. from his cow Nandinī, who yielded everything desired; Viçvāmitra asked Vasishṭha to give him Nandinī for an arbuda of kine or his kingdom, but in vain. Then he wanted to take the cow by force. She repaired to Vasishṭha, who at first did nothing, saying, "I am a forgiving brahman"; but at last he said: "I do not abandon you! Stay if you can!" Hearing this word, the cow attacked Viçvāmitra's troops; from her tail she began to rain showers of burning coals; from her tail she brought forth Pahlavas, from her udders Drāviḍas and Çakas, from her womb (yonideçāt) Yavanas, from her dung (çakṛt) Çabaras, from her urine Kāñcis, and from her sides Çarabhas (B. Çabarān and kāṃçcid instead of Kāñcīn), and from the froth of her mouth Pauṇḍras, Kirātas, Yavanas, Siṃhalas, Barbaras, Vaçās (B. Khaçān), Civukas, Pulindas, Cīnas, Hūṇas, Keralas, and other Mlecchas, who attacked Viçvāmitra's soldiers. Viçvāmitra's troops fled, but none was deprived of life. Viçvāmitra then, disgusted with kshatriya prowess ("brahman prowess is true prowess"), set his mind on asceticism, and finally became a brahman and drank soma with Indra (I, 175). — § 224: Kalmāshapāda (q.v.)—§ 225. Vasishṭha patiently bore his grief, and resolved rather to sacrifice his own life than exterminate the Kauçikas. He threw himself down from the summit of Meru, entered a huge fire in the forest, and tied a strong weight to his neck and threw himself into the sea, but all in vain, and, in distress of heart, he returned to his hermitage (I, 176). Beholding it bereft of his children, he left it again and tied himself strongly with cords and flung himself into a mighty river, but the stream cut those cords and cast the ṛshi ashore, whence that river was called Vipāçā. Once more he threw himself into a river flowing from Himavat (Haimavatī), but the river immediately fled in 100 different directions, and has since been known by the name of the Çatadru ("çatadhā vidrutā", v. 6753). He now again went towards his hermitage, and was on the way addressed by Adṛçyantī, the wife of Çaktri, who had for twelve years borne his child in her womb. Hearing that child in the womb reciting the Vedas with the six Aṅgas, Vasishṭha refrained from self-destruction, and, accompanied by Adṛçyantī, returned to his hermitage. One day he saw Kalmāshapāda, who would devour him; Adṛçyantī was terrified, but Vasishṭha restrained him by uttering "huṃ", and, sprinkling him with water sanctified by mantras, and freed him from his curse that had lasted twelve years. Kalmāshapāda promised never more to insult brahmans, and prevailed upon Vasishṭha that he accompanied him to his capital Ayodhyā and begat a son for him on the queen. Then he went back to his hermitage. After twelve years the queen tore open her womb by a stone, and then was born the rājarshi Açmaka, who founded the city of Paudanya (I, 177).—§ 226: Parāçara (q.v.).

Vasishṭhāpavāha ("the carrying away of Vasishṭha"), name of a tīrtha. § 615 (Baladevatīrthayātrā): IX, 41, †2357; 42, †2358.—§ 615*p* (do.): A great enmity arose between Viçvāmitra and Vasishṭha, due to their rivalry in respect of ascetic austerities. The hermitage of Vasishṭha was in Sthāṇutīrtha, on the bank of the Sarasvatī; on the opposite bank was the hermitage of Viçvāmitra. There (i.e. in Sthāṇutīrtha) Sthāṇu had practised penances, and having performed a sacrifice and worshipped the Sarasvatī he had established that tīrtha, and there the gods in days of yore installed Skanda. In that tīrtha on the Sarasvatī, the ṛshi Viçvāmitra, by his penances, disturbed Vasishṭha. Viçvāmitra and Vasishṭha every day challenged each other in respect of the superiority of their penances. Viçvāmitra ordered the Sarasvatī, notwithstanding her trembling, to bring Vasishṭha into his presence, that he might slay him. Vasishṭha willingly let her do so, lest Viçvāmitra should curse her. Sarasvatī washed away one of her banks and bore Vasishṭha (who praised the Sarasvatī (q)) away and informed Kauçika (i.e. Viçvāmitra) about his arrival; but while Viçvāmitra was looking for a weapon she quickly bore Vasishṭha back to the eastern bank. Viçvāmitra cursed her, saying that her current should be changed into blood, which is acceptable only to the Rākshasas. For a whole year she then flowed bearing blood mixed with water. The gods, the Gandharvas, and the Apsarases grieved. For this reason the tīrtha came to be called V. Sarasvatī, however, once more got back her own proper condition (IX, 42), when some munis on a tīrthayātrā to the Sarasvatī, having bathed in all her tīrthas came to V. and saw the water mixed with blood, and that innumerable Rākshasas were drinking it. Having learnt the cause, they worshipped Mahādeva with penances and purified the Sarasvatī. The Rākshasas, who were Brahma-Rākshasas (so those among vaiçyas, çūdras, and kshatriyas, who hate and injure the brahmans, become Rākshasas), afflicted with hunger, sought the protection of the munis, who, having ordained what should be the food of the Rākshasas (r) solicited the Sarasvatī, who assumed a new shape called Aruṇā; bathing in that new river the Rākshasas abandoned their bodies and went to heaven. Ascertaining all this, Indra (s) bathed there and became purified of a grievous sin (i.e. brahmahatyā): IX, 42, 2398.

[Vasishṭhopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to Vasishṭha"). § 223 (cf. Caitrarathap.). Arjuna asked: "Why did Kalmāshapāda command his queen to go to Vasishṭha? And was this an act of sin on the part of Vasishṭha?" The Gandharva said: Under the influence of the curse, Kalmāshapāda, in anger, went out of his capital, accompanied by his wife. In a solitary part of the woods he saw a brahman and his wife (Āṅgirasī, v. 6908) embracing each other. The couple ran away, but Kalmāshapāda forcibly seized the brahman. The brāhmaṇī asked him to liberate her husband, but he cruelly devoured him. The tears that the woman shed blazed up like fire and consumed everything in that place. The brāhmaṇī cursed the rājarshi, saying that he should meet with instant death when cohabiting with his wife, and that his wife should have a son from Vasishṭha, whose children he had devoured, and that child should be the propagator of his race. Then she entered the fire. Vasishṭha, by his ascetic power, immediately knew all about it. And long after this, when the rājarshi became freed from his curse, he approached his wife Madayantī, not remembering the curse of the brāhmaṇī. Hearing, however, the words of his wife, he recollected the curse, and, therefore, he appointed Vasishṭha to beget a son on his queen (I, 182).

Vasu[1], surnamed Uparicara, king of the Cedis. § 73 (cf. Ādivaṃçāvataraṇa). Instructed by Indra king V. won the kingdom of the Cedis. Some time after he dwelled in a hermitage practising austerities, from which the gods, headed by Indra, prevailed upon him to refrain. Indra gave him a crystal vimāna (chariot) capable of carrying him through the air like a god, and a triumphal (vaijayantī) garland named Indramālā, and a bamboo pole to protect the peaceful. After a year the king planted this pole in the ground in order to worship Indra (from that time all kings plant a bamboo pole, and the next day they cover it with golden clothes, etc.). Indra came there in the form of a swan to accept the worship, and blessed the men and kings who would observe this festivity: I, 63, 2335 (Pauravanandanaḥ), 2354, 2355, 2358.—§ 74 (do.): From the country of the Cedis V. ruled the whole world. [Vicitravīryasutotpatti(ḥ)] ("begetting of sons for Vicitravīrya"). § 171 (cf. Bhīshma-Satyavatī-saṃvāda). Satyavatī related to Bhīshma the birth of Dvaipāyana (cf. § 77; from the darkness of his skin he is also called Kṛshṇa (v. 4236)), who instantly came when Kālī (i.e. Satyavatī) thought of him, and promised to raise offspring in the widows of Vicitravīrya. As there was no time for them to observe a rigid vow for one full year, he ordered that they should tolerate his ugliness. Satyavatī first addressed herself to Kausalyā (i.e. Ambikā) and fed brahmans, devarshis, and guests (I, 105). Ambikā, seeing Vyāsa, closed her eyes in fear; therefore her son, though he was destined to be mighty, etc., and to have 100 sons, had to be blind. After his (i.e. Dhṛtarāshṭra's) birth, Vyāsa approached Ambālikā, who became pale with fear; therefore, her son was pale and was named Pāṇḍu. Ambālikā refused to receive Vyāsa again and sent him a çūdra maid of hers, adorned with her own ornaments; on her he begat Vidura, who was Dharma, born under the curse of Māṇḍavya. Vyāsa then disappeared (I, 106).

[Vicitravīryoparama(ḥ)] ("death of Vicitravīrya"). § 167 (cf. Citrāṅgadopākhyāna). When Vicitravīrya had come of age, Bhīshma went to Vārāṇasī to the svayaṃvara of the three daughters of the king of Kāçi, and, in order to marry them to Vicitravīrya, he carried them off with force to Hāstinapura (having defeated the other princes assembled, among these king Çālva, whom he conquered by means of the Vāruṇa and the Aindra weapons, but at last he left him with his life to return to his capital). The eldest, Ambā, he let free before the wedding, as she declared that she, in her heart, had chosen the Saubha king (i.e. Çālva), and had been chosen by him. Ambikā and Ambālikā he bestowed on Vicitravīrya. After seven years Vicitravīrya died of consumption (yakshman) (I, 102).

[Viçvāmitropākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to Viçvāmitra"): § 721*b* (Ānuçāsanik.). Bhīshma said: King Ajamīḍha (of Bharata's race) > king Jahnu (who got Gaṅgā for his daughter) > Sindhudvīpa (virtuous) > R-ṛ Balākāçva > Vallabha > Kuçika > Gādhi, who, being childless and desiring to have a son, repaired to the forest, where the beautiful Satyavatī was born to him. Cyavana's son, Ṛcīka Bhārgava, asked for her hand; but as he was poor, Gādhi required of him as a dower 1,000 white horses having one black ear, which he obtained from Varuṇa (by thinking of them at Açvatīrtha, on the bank of the Gaṅgā, not far from Kānyakubja). Ṛcīka granted her a boon, that she should have a son; she related this to her mother, who prevailed upon her to obtain a son also for her; having promised them both a son, he told the mother to embrace an açvattha tree and Satyavatī an uḍumbara tree, and each of them to eat a certain caru (sacrificial offering), consecrated with hymns. The mother exchanged both the trees and the carus. Ṛcīka had placed the entire brahman-energy in Satyavatī's caru and the kshatriya-energy in that of her mother; "therefore, thy mother will give birth to an excellent brahman and thou to a terrible kshatriya." Satyavatī prevailed upon him, that not her son, but her son's son should be such. Then, by the favour of Ṛcīka, she gave birth to Jamadagni, and the wife of Gādhi to the Brahmarshi (read brahmarshiṃ) Viçvāmitra, versed in the Vedas (brahmavādinaṃ). Viçvāmitra attained to the state of a brahman, and became the founder of a race of brahmans. Madhucchanda, etc., (β), were all sons of Viçvāmitra (XIII, 4).

Vidulāputraçāsana(m) ("Vidulā's instruction of her son"). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 333.—§ 568 (Bhagavady.): The princess Vidulā one day rebuked her son Sañjaya, who, being defeated by the king of the Sindhus, was lying dejected. "Without wrath, as thou art, thou canst not be counted as a man . . . It is better to blaze up for a moment than to smoke for a long time . . . He who has not achieved a great feat, forming the subject of men's conversation, only increases the number of men; he is neither man nor woman . . . It behoves thee not to adopt the idle, wretched, infamous, and miserable profession of mendicancy that is worthy only of a coward . . . He is a man who cherishes wrath and does not forgive . . . (V, 133) . . . The followers of the Sindhu-king are all discontented and waiting for the distress of their master; others will come to thee with their auxiliaries if they behold thee put forth thy prowess . . . While thou wert a child, a brahman said: 'this one, falling into great distress, will again win greatness.' Çambara has said 'there is not a more miserable state than that in which one does not see how to procure his food from day to day'. By slaying Vṛtra, Indra became Mahendra ("the great Indra"), and obtained the soma-cup of Mahendra (v. 4562, B.: Māhendraṃ ca grahaṃ lebhe), and the lordship of all the worlds . . . Sovereignty is either the door of heaven or amṛta . . . In the possession of wealth, rejoice, as before, with the Sauvīra-maidens, and be not ruled over by the Saindhava-maidens . . . Handed down by tradition from time immemorial, the eternal essence of kshatriya-virtues (kshatrahṛdayaṃ) has been ordained by Prajāpati himself . . . A kshatriya should rather break than yield. He should bow down to brahmans only and to virtue (dharmāya); he should rule over all other orders, destroying all evil-doers" (V. 134). The son complained that the heart of his mother was made of steel, and blamed the kshatriya-practices. Vidulā said that if Sañjaya was about to be stained by infamy and she did not say it to him, her affection for him would be like that of a she-ass for her young. He ought to have recourse to virtue and profit (V, 135) . . . "We have many treasure-houses unknown to thee . . . thou hast also more than one friend." Despair left Sañjaya's heart, though he was not gifted with great intelligence. He roused himself and achieved all that his mother had pointed out. Indeed, this history, named Jaya, should be listened to by everyone desirous of victory, etc. (V, 136).

Vidūra, v. Vidūratha[1].

Vidurāgamana(m) ("the arrival of Vidura"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 315 (°aṃ parva, i.e. Vidurāgamanaparvan).—§ 11 (do.): I, 2, 362 (°aṃ, do.).

[Vidurāgamanaparvan(°va)] ("on the arrival of Vidura", the 14th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). (Cf. Vidurāgamana). § 241. The news had been reported to all the monarchs that Draupadī had been married to the sons of Pāṇḍu, whom they had thought burnt to death. They then set out for their own dominions. Duryodhana became greatly depressed, and, with his brothers, etc., he set out for Hāstinapura. Vidura was filled with joy, and related the news to Dhṛtarāshṭra, who first thought that it was Duryodhana who had been selected by Draupadī, but was very glad on hearing that it was the Pāṇḍavas. But Duryodhana and Karṇa tried to stir him up against them (I, 200). Dhṛtarāshṭra said that he was of their opinion, but did not wish to inform Vidura of it; therefore he had applauded the Pāṇḍavas in Vidura's presence. Duryodhana suggested several plans for getting the better of the Pāṇḍavas (I, 201). Karṇa said that the plans would not succeed; he recommended to vanquish them by prowess, while their party was yet weak. Dhṛtarāshṭra summoned Bhīshma, Droṇa, and Vidura, and consulted with them (I, 202). Bhīshma recommended to give to the Pāṇḍavas one half of the kingdom (I, 203). Droṇa approved of this, and, moreover, recommended that a messenger should be sent to Drupada with gifts, and say that Dhṛtarāshṭra was very glad of the new alliance with him, and would take the Pāṇḍavas to Hāstinapura to be installed on the throne.—§ 242. Karṇa spoke contemptuously of Bhīshma and Droṇa, saying that happiness depended on destiny, and not on friends, etc., mentioning the Magadha king Ambuvīca (b) (I, 204).—§ 243. Vidura recommended the suggestion of Bhīshma and Droṇa, and said that the Pāṇḍavas were invincible, as they were assisted by Rāma, Janārdana, Sātyaki, etc. (I, 205). Vidura was sent by Dhṛtarāshṭra with numerous jewels, etc., to Drupada and the Pāṇḍavas (also Kṛshṇa was present). Vidura said that Dhṛtarāshṭra was highly pleased with the alliance with Drupada, and asked Drupada to permit the Pāṇḍavas, with their mother and wife, to return to their paternal city (I, 206).

[Viduraparinaya(h)] ("the marriage of Vidura"). § 179 (Sambhavap.): Bhīshma married king Devaka's daughter, who was by caste a pārasavī, to Vidura, who begat upon her many children as excellent as himself (I, 114).

[Vipulopākhyāna(ṃ)] ("the episode about Vipula"): § 743*b* (Ānuçāsanik.). Bhīshma said: There was, in days of yore, a Ṛ. Devaçarman; his beautiful wife Ruci fascinated every one who saw her, both D., G., and Dā., and particularly Indra. Devaçarman knew very well the disposition of women, as well as Indra's coveting other men's wives. Once, desirous of performing a sacrifice, he summoned his favourite disciple Vipula Bhārgava, and asked him, during his absence, to protect Ruci against Indra, describing to him the disguises that Indra assumes (a). Vipula, by his Yoga-power, entered the body of Ruci (description) (XIII, 40). Indra came, but Ruci was unable to move or to utter a word in reply; then, influenced by Vipula, she answered in Sanskrit (? vāṇī saṃskārabhūshaṇā) words that she did not intend to utter. Indra became perplexed, and when he with his spiritual eye discovered Vipula within Ruci, he became afraid that he might curse him. Vipula left the body of Ruci and returned to his own body which was lying near, and rebuked Indra, mentioning Gautama's curse, owing to which Indra's body became disfigured with 1,000 sex-marks, which, owing to Gautama's compassion, were afterwards changed into eyes, "see that thou dost not, with thy sons and counsellors, meet with destruction." Çakra, overwhelmed with shame, made himself invisible. A moment after, Devaçarman came back, and granted Vipula the boon that he should never swerve away from righteousness; dismissed by his preceptor, Vipula left his abode and practised the most severe austerities. Devaçarman also, with his spouse, began to live in the woods, perfectly fearless of Indra (XIII, 41). Vipula became full of pride. After some time the occasion came for a ceremony of gifts, with respect to the sister of Ruci ~ the Aṅga-king Citraratha. Meanwhile, a celestial damsel dropped some flowers down to the earth; they were picked up by Ruci, who, adorned with them, went to the palace of the Aṅga-king. Her sister, Prabhāvatī, the Aṅga-queen, urged her to obtain some for her, and Ruci informed her husband, who, summoning Vipula, commanded him to bring him some flowers of the same kind. Vipula found some such flowers still lying scattered, quite fresh, and set out for Campā; on his way he saw a human couple moving in a circle, hand in hand; a dispute arose between them, and at last, each of them took the oath "that one of us who speaks falsely shall, in the next world, meet with the end which will be Vipula's". Vipula became very sad; proceeding a little way he beheld six other men playing with dice made of gold and silver; they were heard by Vipula to take the same oath as the first couple. At last he recollected the manner in which he had acted in protecting his preceptor's wife (placing limb within limb, face within face), without telling his preceptor the truth. Coming to Campā, he gave the flowers to his preceptor (XIII, 42). Devaçarman, too, knew what he had seen on his way, and how he had acted in protecting Ruci; he explained that the first couple were Day and Night, the others the six Seasons. He absolved Vipula and ascended to heaven with his wife and his disciple. Mārkaṇḍeya had narrated this tale to Bhīshma on the banks of the Gaṅgā (XIII, 43).

Cf. Haihaya, pl.

[Vītahavyopākhyāna(ṃ)] ("the episode relating to Vītahavya"). § 736*b* (Ānuçāsanik.). Bhīshma said: While Manu, in days of yore, was righteously ruling his subjects, he obtained a righteous son Çaryāti, in whose race were born Vatsa's sons, the kings Haihaya and Tālajaṅgha. Haihaya (or Vītahavya) had 10 wives and 100 heroic sons, who all studied the Vedas and Dhanurveda. In Kāçi was king Haryaçva, the grandfather of Divodāsa. The sons of king Haihaya (Vītahavya-dāyādaiḥ) invaded Kāçi and slew king Haryaçva in a battle between the Gaṅgā and the Yamunā, and then went back to their own delightful city in the Vatsa-country. Meanwhile Haryaçva's son Sudeva was installed as Kāçi-king. The 100 sons of Vītahavya once more came and defeated him in battle, and then returned to their own city. After this, Sudeva's son Divodāsa became installed as Kāçi-king; at the command of Indra he built the city of Vārāṇasī between the Gaṅgā and the southern bank of the Gomatī. The Haihayas again attacked Divodāsa; he fought for 1,000 days, lost his army, left his capital, and fled away to the retreat of Bharadvāja, who was his priest, and performed a sacrifice, in consequence of which Pratardana was born to him. On the same day when Pratardana was born, he grew as great as a boy of 13 years, and mastered the Vedas and Dhanurveda, Bharadvāja (aided by Yoga) having entered into the prince and caused all the energy of the universe to enter his body (he was praised by bards and D-ṛ., etc.; description). Divodāsa installed Pratardana as yuvarāja and ordered him to march against the sons of Vītahavya. Pratardana speedily crossed the Gaṅgā and proceeded against the city of the Vītahavyas and slew them all. King Vītahavya fled away to the retreat of Bhṛgu. Pratardana followed in his footsteps and ordered Bhṛgu to surrender king Vītahavya. Bhṛgu said: "there is no kshatriya in this retreat; they who are here are all brahmans." Pratardana returned home, and Vītahavya became a Br-ṛ. in consequence of Bhṛgu's statement. Vītahavya>Gṛtsamada (V-ṛ., resembling Indra and, therefore, once afflicted by Dai.; alleged quotation from the Ṛgveda)>Sutejas>Varcas>Vihavya>Vitatya>Satya>Santa>Ṛ. Çravas>Tamas>Prakāça>Vāgindra>Pramati (B. °mi°) (mastering the Vedas and Vedāṅgas)>Ruru (begotten upon Aps. Ghṛtācī)>Çunaka (begotten upon Pramadvarā)>Çaunaka (XIII, 30).

She worshipped the Pitṛs and the gods with fasts and practised penances in that solitary forest not wishing to marry, as she did not see a husband worthy of her. When she could no longer move, she set her heart upon departing for the other world. Nārada told her that she had no regions of blessedness to obtain, not having cleansed herself by the rite of marriage. She then went to a concourse of ṛshis, and said that she would give half her penances to him who would accept her hand in marriage. Gālava's son, the ṛshi Prākçṛṅgavat, accepted her hand on condition that he should live with her only one night. On that night she became a young lady of the finest complexion, etc., and Gālava's son became very happy. At morn she said: "he that will, with rapt attention, pass one night in this tīrtha after having gratified the gods with oblations of water, shall obtain the merit of the vow of brahmacarya for 58 years," and then she departed for heaven. He soon followed her, moved by sorrow: IX, 52, 3003.

Vṛtraçatru, Vṛtrahan, Vṛtrahantṛ, Vṛtranisūdana = Indra, q.v.

[Vṛtra-vadha(ḥ)] ("the killing of Vṛtra"): § 693*b* (Mokshadh.). Bhīshma said: In days of yore, Indra, accompanied by the celestial forces, proceeded in his chariot, and beheld As. Vṛtra, stationed before him like a mountain, 500 yojanas in height and 300 in circumference. Indra was struck with palsy in the lower extremities. On the eve of that great battle between D. and As. there arose loud shouts from both sides, etc. Vṛtra felt neither awe nor fear. Then the encounter commenced; the entire welkin was enveloped by the combatants of both sides; all the gods with Brahmán, and Ṛ., Si., G., and Aps. on their chariots had assembled in order to see the battle. Vṛtra shot rocks, the gods arrows; Vṛtra employed illusion; Indra was stupefied; Vasishṭha restored him to his senses by the Rathantara, pointing out to him Brahmán, etc. (a). Indra, by yoga, dispelled the illusions of Vṛtra. Bṛhaspati (the son of Aṅgiras) and Ṛ. repaired to Çiva, whose energy became a fever and penetrated Vṛtra; Vishṇu entered the thunderbolt of Indra; Bṛhaspati, Vasishṭha, and Ṛ. urged Indra to slay Vṛtra, and so did Çiva, saying that Vṛtra was the soul of the universe, capable of going everywhere; for 60,000 years Vṛtra had practised penances in order to obtain strength; Brahmán had given him the boons he had solicited: the greatness of yogins, large powers of illusions, excess of might, etc.; Çiva told Indra to slay him with yoga, and imparted to him his own energy. D. and Ṛ. uttered loud cheers, etc. Suddenly all As. were afflicted with the loss of memory; in a trice their powers of illusion also disappeared. Ṛ. and D. praised Çakra and Çiva (XII, 282). Description of the symptoms that appeared on the body of Vṛtra when he was overtaken by that fever: His memory issued out of his mouth in form of a dreadful jackal. Inauspicious omens. Indra looked hard at him; Vṛtra yawned and uttered superhuman cries; while Vṛtra was yawning Indra hurled his thunderbolt at him and slew him; [XII, 287, 58 ff. = 10,267 ff.: the thunderbolt cut Vṛtra into two halves; Vṛtra then came to the highest region of Vishṇu, for it was by his devotion to Vishṇu that he had overwhelmed the universe]; then Indra entered heaven with that thunderbolt pervaded by Vishṇu. Then Brahmavadhyā (description) issued out of the body of the slain Vṛtra. A little while after, when Indra was proceeding towards heaven, she seized him and stuck to him. Indra entered the fibres of a lotus stalk and dwelt there for many years. But Brahmavadhyā pursued him closely, and deprived him of all his energy. At last he repaired to Brahmán, who made her leave Indra by apportioning one quarter to Agni (whence it should enter him who did not offer oblations of seed, etc. to Agni); one quarter to the trees, herbs, and all kinds of grass (whence it should possess the men who would cut or tear any of them at parvan-days); one quarter to the Apsarases (whence it should possess that man who would cohabit with women during their courses); and one quarter to the waters (whence it should possess that man who would cast into the waters phlegm and urine and excrements). With Brahmán's permission Indra then performed a horse-sacrifice and thereby became cleansed, regained his prosperity, and slew thousands of foes. From the blood of Vṛtra were born the çikhaṇḍāḥ (the crests of cocks (?) or name of a plant, BR.), which, for this reason, must not be eaten by the twice-born classes, etc. Blessing upon the reciter (XII, 283).

Yāja, a Brahmarshi, brother of Upayāja. § 218*b* (Draupadīsambhava): Drupada saw the two brothers of Kaçyapa's race, Y. and Upayāja. He courted Upayāja and asked him to perform a sacrifice, by which he might obtain a son who might slay Droṇa, and promised him an arbuda of kine. But Upayāja refused. Drupada once more began to pay homage to him, and after a year Upayāja said that his elder brother, Y., once had taken up a fruit without inquiring of the purity of the spot, and had, in the house of his preceptor, used to eat the remains of other people's feasts; he would entertain no scruples. Describing the might of Droṇa ("Droṇa is also skilled in the Brahmāstra, his bow is six aratnis long") Drupada promised Y. to give him eight ayutas (cf. v. 6385: "an arbuda") of kine. Y. consented and prevailed upon Upayāja to assist him. Upayāja then spoke to Drupada of everything required for the sacrifice: I, 167, 6362 (°opayājau Brahmarshī), 6376 (°syāçramaṃ), 6377, 6386.—§ 218 (do.): I, 167, 6390, 6391 (6392), 6393, 6405, 6406 (in the sacrifice which Y. and Upayāja performed for Drupada, Dhṛshṭadyumna and Draupadī were born from the sacrificial fire).—§ 306 (Anudyūtap.): II, 80, 2662 (°opayājatapasā lebhe putraṃ sa pāvakāt, sc. Yakshayuddha(ṃ) ("the combat with the Yakshas"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 322 (i.e. Yakshayuddhaparvan).

[Yakshayuddhaparvan(°va)] ("the combat with the Yakshas", the 38th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Yakshayuddha). § 436. The Pāṇḍavas, etc., returned to the hermitage of Nārāyaṇa. Once Yudhishṭhira said to them: "We have passed these four years in the woods; it has been appointed by Arjuna, that after the fifth year he will come to the mountain Çveta." They then set out with the brahmans and the Rākshasas, and protected by Lomaça, sometimes going on foot, sometimes carried by the Rākshasas, towards the north, beholding on the way the mountains Maināka, Gandhamādana, and Çveta, and on the seventeenth day they reached the slopes of Himavat, not far from Gandhamādana, and were received by R.-ṛ. Vṛshaparvan in his hermitage, where they passed seven nights. On the eighth day they entrusted their remaining robes, their sacrificial vessels, ornaments, and jewels to Vṛshaparvan, and, following his instructions, set out for the north, on foot, with Dhaumya, Kṛshṇā, and Lomaça. On the fourth day they reached Çveta, and entered Gandhamādana (b) with Draupadī and the brahmans, and saw the great Gaṅgā (c). Thereafter, they went to the hermitage of Ārshṭishеṇa (III, 158). Ārshṭishеṇa received the four Pāṇḍavas and Kṛshṇa and Dhaumya, and said that during the parvan days ṛshis living upon water and air and moving through the sky come to this mountain, sounds of kettledrums, etc., being heard on the summits, and that they should not attempt to proceed further, but wait for Arjuna there, as they could not go beyond Kailāsa (d) (III, 159).—§ 437. They passed the fifth year in the hermitage of Ārshṭishеṇa, eating flesh of deer killed with unpoisoned shafts, listening to the stories told by Lomaça. Ghaṭotkaca had departed, promising to be present when occasion arose. Munis and Cāraṇas visited them. One day Suparṇa carried off a mighty Nāga from the lake, while the mountain trembled, etc., and the wind, raised by Suparṇa's wings, brought celestial flowers of five colours before the Pāṇḍavas towards the river Açvarathā. Kṛshṇā expressed to Bhīma the wish of seeing the top of the mountain when he had driven away the Rākshasas. Bhīma set out with bow, sword, and mace, and having ascended the summit, thereby gladdening Kinnaras, Nāgas, Munis, Gandharvas, and Rākshasas, he blew his shell. Yakshas and Rākshasas (Krodhavaçāḥ, v. 11757) assailed him with maces, clubs, etc., but were killed or defeated, and the surviving fled towards the south, forsaking their weapons. The Rākshasa Maṇimat, the friend of Kubera, in vain attempted to recall them, and with clubs, javelins, etc., he rushed at Bhīma and pierced his right arm with an iron spear with a golden haft, but at last was killed by Bhīma with his mace. The surviving Rākshasas went towards the east (III, 160). —§ 438. Hearing various sounds and not seeing Bhīma, the Pāṇḍavas and Kṛshṇā, and Dhaumya and the brahmans were filled with anxiety, and, entrusting Draupadī to the charge of Ārshṭishеṇa, they ascended the summit of the mountain and embraced Bhīma, who was censured and again warned by Yudhishṭhira. Kubera, on hearing about the matter from the Rākshasas, in anger let yoke his carriage, and, eulogized by the gods and Gandharvas, and surrounded by 1,000 Yakshas, he set out through the firmament to Gandhamādana, where he seated himself on his seat Pushpaka (b), surrounded by Yakshas, Rākshasas, Gandharvas, and Apsarases, with his noose and sword and bow, and asked Yudhishṭhira not to be angry with Bhīma as Bhīma had only been the instrument of destiny, and said to Bhīma that he did not mind his act of rashness as he had thereby been delivered from the curse of Agastya (c) (III, 161). Kubera then gave Yudhishṭhira some wise counsel, referring to the Kṛta-yuga (d); he said, that Yudhishṭhira ought to check the rashness of Bhīmasena; they should return to the hermitage of the R.-ṛ Ārshṭishеṇa and reside there during the first dark fortnight; the inhabitants of Alakā with Gandharvas, and Yakshas with Kinnaras, etc., should, at the command of Kubera, protect them, and his servants procure for them meat and drink; he praised Arjuna (e). Arjuna would soon join them. Then Kubera went to the mountain Asta, followed by thousands of Yakshas and Rākshasas in vehicles drawn by horses flying in the air. The dead bodies of the Rākshasas were, at the command of Kubera, removed. The Pāṇḍavas dwelt several nights there, being honoured by the Rākshasas (III, 162).—§ 439. At sunrise, Dhaumya and Ārshṭishеṇa came to them, and Dhaumya, seizing Yudhishṭhira's hands, pointed out, towards the east, the Mandara mountain, the east being the region of Indra and Vaiçravaṇa, as the South is that of Yama with his abode Saṃyamana, and the Asta mountain, where the sun sets in the west, that of Varuṇa, together with the ocean; in the north Meru, with the dwelling of Brahmán, where Prajāpati creates all creatures, and the seven mind-born sons of Brahmán (of whom Daksha was the seventh), and where the seven Devarshis (i.e. Saptarshayaḥ), with Vasishṭha at their head, rise and set; next, to the east of Meru, the abode of Nārāyaṇa or Vishṇu, that cannot be seen by gods or Dānavas, and where even Brahmarshis have no access, not to speak of Maharshis, but only Yatis; thence, they do not return to this world; Vishṇu alone shines there. Description of the revolving around Meru of the sun, moon, and stars ("having coursed round Meru, the moon again repairs to Mandara", v. ii, 873) (III, 163).—§ 440. The Pāṇḍavas dwelled there for a month, visited by Gandharvas and Maharshis. A night and a day became to them like a year, for since the departure of Arjuna, they had not felt joy. After having dwelt for five years in the abode of Indra and obtained all celestial weapons from him, Āgneya, Vāruṇa, Saumya, Vāyavya, Vaishṇava, Aindra, Pāçupata, Brāhmya, Pārameshṭhya, and those of Prajāpati, Yama, Dhātṛ, Savitṛ, Tvashṭṛ, and Vaiçravaṇa. Arjuna took leave of Indra and came to Gandhamādana (III, 164).

Yānasandhi ("negotiation for peace by embassy"?). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 331 (parva, i.e. Yānasandhiparvan).

[Yānasandhiparvan(°va)] ("section relating to the Yānasandhi", q.v.), the 60th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr. § 561. After the night had passed away, all the princes and chiefs, Bhīshma, etc. (a) entered the court-hall (description) to hear the message of Sañjaya (adorned with ear-rings), who had come back from the Pāṇḍavas by the aid of Saindhava steeds. Sañjaya related the salutations of the Pāṇḍavas (V, 47). Sañjaya related that Arjuna (! cf. § 556: Sañjayayānap., V, 23-28) had said, with Yudhishṭhira's sanction, that Sañjaya should say to Duryodhana and Karṇa, threatening them with Bhīmasena, etc. (β), that if the Dhārtarāshṭras desired war, then all the aims of the Pāṇḍavas were accomplished, as Duryodhana should lie down on the bare earth, deprived of life, etc. Arjuna (b) trusted himself and Kṛshṇa (c); he said that Duryodhana often thought of imprisoning Kṛshṇa, and sought to create a sudden disunion between Kṛshṇa and Arjuna. "There are with us many aged brahmans, versed in various sciences . . . who are prophesying the great destruction of the Kurus and the Sṛñjayas, and the ultimate victory of the Pāṇḍavas . . . thy bow Gāṇḍīva yawns without being handled, etc.; on the top of my flagstaff are heard terrific voices ('when shall thy car be yoked, O Kirīṭin?'); innumerable jackals howl at night, and Rākshasas frequently alight from the sky . . . I will use the Sthūṇākarṇa, Pāçupata, and Brāhma weapons, and all those that Çakra gave me." [This speech of Arjuna is not found in § 556: Sañjayayānap.] (V, 48). Bhīshma said to Duryodhana that Nara and Nārāyaṇa (Nara-Nārāyaṇau) (d) were Arjuna and Kṛshṇa: it was with their aid that Çakra vanquished the Daityas and Dānavas; Nara slew hundreds and thousands of Paulomas and Kālakañjas in battle; Arjuna, with an arrow, severed the head of the Asura Jambha while the latter was about to swallow him; he afflicted Hiraṇyapura on the other side of the ocean, having vanquished in battle 60,000 of Nivātakavacas; and in the same way also Nārāyaṇa has, in this world, destroyed numberless other Daityas and Dānavas. Karṇa boasted that he would slay all the Pāṇḍavas in battle, but was rebuked by Bhīshma, saying that Karṇa had seen his own brother slain by Arjuna in the city of Virāṭa, and alluding to the contents of the Goharaṇa-, and the Ghoshayātrāparvan. Droṇa also counselled peace, but got no answer from Dhṛtarāshṭra (V, 49). At the request of Dhṛtarāshṭra, Sañjaya related that the Pañcālas, etc. (γ) looked up to Yudhishṭhira. As he was questioned about Dhṛshṭadyumna and the Somakas, he first fell down in a swoon. Then, regarding Bhīmasena (ε) he mentioned the lac-house, etc. (δ); regarding Arjuna, the burning of the Khāṇḍava forest, etc. (ε); then Nakula (f) and Sahadeva (g); Çikhaṇḍin (ζ); the five Kekaya princes, etc. (η) (V, 50). Dhṛtarāshṭra was most afraid of Bhīma (who was taller than Arjuna by the span of the thumb), with his mace (full four cubits in length, with six sides), mentioning his killing Jarāsandha (V, 51). Dhṛtarāshṭra was also afraid of Arjuna, who he feared would conquer Karṇa (being compassionate and heedless), and Droṇa (being aged and having affection for his pupil Arjuna); "thirty-three years have passed since the burning of the Khāṇḍava forest; we have never heard of his being defeated anywhere" [but cf. the reading of B. trayastṛṃçat samāhūya, i.e. challenging the thirty-three gods] (V, 52). Dhṛtarāshṭra was afraid of the allies of Yudhishṭhira: the Pāñcālas, Kekayas, etc. (θ) (V, 53). Sañjaya rebuked Dhṛtarāshṭra for his behaviour towards the Pāṇḍavas; "the Matsyas, etc. (ι) all decline to pay thee homage now" (V, 54). Duryodhana said, that when the Pāṇḍavas had been exiled, there came to them Kṛshṇa, etc. (κ), all assembled in a place not far from Indraprastha, and suggested to Yudhishṭhira that he should take back the kingdom; "the people of the realm were all annoyed with us, and all our friends also were angry with us"; but Bhīshma, Kṛpa, and Açvatthāman had despised the foes ("inflamed with anger at the death of his father this Bhīshma, in days of old, had conquered all the kings of the earth, in a single chariot"). "Now the Pāṇḍavas are without allies; and all these kings can, for my sake, enter the fire or the sea . . . Having given up all hopes of a town, Yudhishṭhira craves only five villages . . . There is none on earth equal to me in an encounter with the mace. In battle, I am Saṅkarshaṇa's equal; I will certainly slay Bhīma, Bhīshma, etc. (λ), every one of these is singly capable of slaying the Pāṇḍavas." He alluded to the superhuman circumstances concerning Bhīshma, etc. (μ), to the resolution of the Saṃçaptakas to slay Arjuna or be slain by him; "our chief warriors are Bhīshma, etc. (ν); they have seven akshauhiṇīs, we have eleven; Bṛhaspati has said, that an army which is less by one-third ought to be encountered" (V, 55). At the request of Duryodhana, Sañjaya described the chariots of Arjuna (h), Yudhishṭhira (i), Bhīmasena (j), Sahadeva (k), Nakula (l); "and excellent steeds, presented by the celestials, carry the sons of Subhadrā and Draupadī" (V, 56). At the request of Dhṛtarāshṭra, Sañjaya mentioned the allies of the Pāṇḍavas, Kṛshṇa, etc. (ξ), and who had been assigned to each of them as his share: Çikhaṇḍin & Bhīshma; Yudhishṭhira & the Madra king; Bhīmasena & Duryodhana's sons and 100 brothers, the rulers of the east and the south; Arjuna & Karṇa, Jayadratha, etc.; the five Kekayas & the Kekayas, Mālavas, Çālvakas, Trigartau Saṃçaptakau; Abhimanyu & Duryodhana's sons (?), Duḥçāsana's sons, king Bṛhadbala; Draupadeyāḥ + Dhṛshṭadyumna & Droṇa; Cekitāna & Somadatta; Sātyaki & Kṛtavarman; Sahadeva & Çakuni; Nakula & Ulūka, Sārasvatāḥ. All the other kings had been distributed in their respective shares. Thus the Pāṇḍava host had been distributed into divisions. Virāṭa with all his Matsya warriors would support Çikhaṇḍin. Dhṛtarāshṭra was exceedingly afraid of Yudhishṭhira, etc. (o). Duryodhana said that Bhīshma, etc. (π) were invincible. Dhṛtarāshṭra maintained that Bhīshma did not wish a battle.

Sañjaya said that Dhṛshṭadyumna was always urging the Pāṇḍavas to fight, and professed that he would alone encounter all the assembled kings: Bhīshma, etc. (ρ), and his words were approved by Yudhishṭhira; Dhṛshṭadyumna had told Sañjaya to say to the Kurus, etc. (σ), that they ought not to suffer themselves to be slain by Arjuna, who was protected by the celestials; they should send a good man to Yudhishṭhira and entreat him to accept the kingdom. [This is not found in Sañjayayānap., § 556] (V, 57). Dhṛtarāshṭra mentioned that Yudhishṭhira led the brahmacarya mode of life from his very youth, and saying that he himself, etc. (τ) did not applaud war, he urged Duryodhana to desist from hostilities and give back to the Pāṇḍavas their kingdom, saying, that it was Karṇa, Duḥçāsana, and Çakuni who led Duryodhana astray. Duryodhana answered that, without depending upon Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc. (υ), he and Karṇa and Duḥçāsana would perform, in honour of Yama, a sacrifice in battle and slay the Pāṇḍavas; he said that he would sacrifice his life rather than surrender to the Pāṇḍavas even that much of land which may be covered by the sharp point of a needle. Dhṛtarāshṭra said that he abandoned Duryodhana for ever, and grieved for the kings who would be crushed by Yuyudhāna, etc. (φ) (V, 58). At the request of Dhṛtarāshṭra, Sañjaya related how he had entered the inner apartments (description) in order to inform Arjuna and Kṛshṇa; he had seen two straight lines on Arjuna's foot-soles. Kṛshṇa had threatened the Kurus, mentioning that Kṛshṇā had invoked him with tears, and that D., As., men, Y., G., and N. were incapable of encountering Arjuna in battle, and alluding to his exploits in the city of Virāṭa (v. Goharaṇap.) (V, 59). Dhṛtarāshṭra represented to Duryodhana that Agni would help Arjuna, remembering what was done to him at Khāṇḍava, that Dharma, etc., would help the Pāṇḍavas from parental affection, that Arjuna took up 500 arrows at a time, that Bhīshma, etc. (χ) regarded him as invincible, and said he desired peace (V, 60). Duryodhana, inflamed with wrath, said that according to Vyāsa, Nārada, and Paraçu-Rāma, the gods never engaged in work; if Agni, Vāyu, Dharma, Indra, or the Açvins had ever engaged in work, the Pārthas could never have fallen into distress, and they and the Maruts would not venture to protect his foes; "charmed by me, Agni will be instantly extinguished . . . , my energy is greater than that of the gods; . . . it is I who set agoing all the affairs of both gods and Asuras . . . ; neither D. nor G., nor As. nor Rā. are capable of saving him who has incurred my displeasure . . . ; thou wilt hear of the defeat of the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ψ); . . . whatever knowledge of weapons there is in Bhīshma, etc. (ω), exists in me as well" (V, 61). Karṇa said to Duryodhana, mentioning the curse of Paraçu-Rāma, when he, by a lie, obtained the Brāhma weapon from him, that he would slay the Pāñcālas, etc. (αα). Bhīshma mentioned the Khāṇḍava forest, and said that the dart which Karṇa had got from Indra, would be reduced to ashes by Kṛshṇa with his discus, and that his other shaft (having a head like a serpent), which he respectfully worshipped with flowery garlands, would be destroyed by Arjuna because he was protected by Kṛshṇa. Karṇa made the pledge not to fight before Bhīshma's fall, and went to his own abode. Bhīshma ridiculed Karṇa's boasting before the kings of Avanti, etc. (ββ) (V, 62). Duryodhana boasted; Vidura praised self-restraint (V, 63). Vidura related that once two birds had flown away with the net in which they were caught, but were again caught when they began to quarrel. "So it is also with kinsmen. Once we, with some hunters and brahmans conversant with magic and charms, repaired to the northern mountain Gandhamādana, with excellent medicinal herbs, and inhabited by Si. and G. There was, on a precipice, some honey, Kubera's favourite drink, guarded by poisonous snakes; the brahmans said that a mortal drinking of it would win immortality, a sightless man obtain sight, and an old man would become a youth. The hunters desired to obtain it, and all perished. So it is with Duryodhana. In a single chariot Arjuna conquered the whole earth; Bhīshma and Droṇa, etc. were routed by him at the city of Virāṭa. Remember also Drupada and the king of the Matsyas" (V, 64). Dhṛtarāshṭra warned Duryodhana against the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (γγ), and recommended him to follow Bhīshma, etc. (δδ) as his guides, mentioning the combat at the city of Virāṭa (V, 65). At the request of Dhṛtarāshṭra, Sañjaya related that Arjuna had said that Bhīshma, etc. (εε) were all on the eve of death, if they did not give up to Yudhishṭhira his own share of the kingdom (V, 66). As Duryodhana showed little regard for the words of Sañjaya, and the rest remained silent, the assembled kings rose and retired. Dhṛtarāshṭra, who always followed the counsels of his son, began to inquire in secret of Sañjaya about the resolves of his own party and of the foes. Sañjaya caused him to let Vidura introduce Vyāsa and Gāndhārī (V, 67). Sañjaya extolled Kṛshṇa (m), and mentioned some of those whom he had vanquished (ζζ) (V, 68). Discourse between Dhṛtarāshṭra and Sañjaya on the attributes of Kṛshṇa. Dhṛtarāshṭra told Duryodhana to seek refuge with Kṛshṇa. Duryodhana refused. Dhṛtarāshṭra complained of him to Gāndhārī. Gāndhārī threatened Duryodhana with Bhīmasena. Vyāsa recommended to Dhṛtarāshṭra to seek salvation through Kṛshṇa. Requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra, Sañjaya explained the path of salvation through Kṛshṇa (V, 69). At the request of Dhṛtarāshṭra, Sañjaya enumerated some names of Kṛshṇa (V, 70). Dhṛtarāshṭra complained that he could not see Kṛshṇa, whom he extolled under several names (ηη) (V, 71).

Yavakrītātmaja ("the son of Yavakrīta"). § 565 (Gālavacarita): V, 109, 3789 (atra—i.e. in the south—Sāvarṇinā caiva Y°ena ca maryādā sthāpitā, brahman, yāṃ Sūryo nātivartate).

[Yavakrītopākhyana(ṃ)] ("the episode relating to Yavakrīta"). § 414 (Tīrthay.). The learned Raibhya and the Ṛshi Bharadvāja were friends. Raibhya had two learned sons, Arvāvasu and Parāvasu; Bharadvāja only one son, Yavakrīta. As Yavakrīta saw that Raibhya and his sons were esteemed by the brahmans, while Bharadvāja was slighted, he practised austerities (exposing himself to a blazing fire) in order to acquire Vedic knowledge for himself and his father (cf. v. 10817) instead of acquiring it from a teacher during a long time. Indra was alarmed, and twice he in vain attempted to make Yavakrīta desist from his penances, saying that they never could be successful. As Yavakrīta declared that he would cut off his limbs and sacrifice them in the fire, Indra assumed the guise of an old decrepit brahman, and began to throw up a dam of sand at that spot of the Bhāgīrathī where Yavakrīta used to bathe, and declared that Yavakrīta's intentions were equally impossible. Then Yavakrīta desisted from his plan, and Indra granted him that the Vedas should be revealed to him and his father, and that he should excel other men. Bharadvāja said that Yavakrīta would become proud and uncharitable and thence destruction would soon overtake him (§ 415), and told him some gāthās, narrated by the gods, about Medhāvin (q.v.).—§ 416. Bharadvāja made Yavakrīta promise to shun the irritable Raibhya and his sons, and Yavakrīta began to offend other ṛshis (III, 135). Once, in the month of Mādhava, he came to the hermitage of Raibhya and seduced (?) (cf. sajjayām āsa, var. lect. Nīl., instead of majjayām āsa) the wife of Parāvasu. When Raibhya came home and saw what had happened, he offered in the fire two matted locks of his hair, whence sprang out a woman resembling his daughter-in-law, who robbed Yavakrīta of his water-pot, and a Rakshas, who flew at him with his uplifted spear, as he had been deprived of his water-pot and rendered unclean (ucchishṭa). Yavakrīta fled to a tank and then to all the rivers, and, finding them all devoid of water, he attempted to enter into the agnihotra room of his father, but was stopped at the door by a blind çūdra warder, and killed by the rakshas. The Rakshas, with the permission of Raibhya, began to live with the female (III, 136). When Bharadvāja returned home, the sacrificial fires, which used to welcome him every day, did not come forward to welcome him. Having heard from the çūdra what had happened, he cursed Raibhya, saying that he should be killed by his eldest son. He cremated Yavakrīta, and then himself entered the fire (III, 137). At that time king Bṛhaddyumna, the yājya of Raibhya, employed Arvāvasu and Parāvasu at a sacrifice, while Raibhya stayed at home with the wife of Parāvasu. One day Parāvasu, returning home to see his wife, met in the darkness his father in the wood wrapped in the skin of a black antelope, and, mistaking him for a deer, killed him. Then, after having performed the funeral rites of his father, he prevailed upon Arvāvasu to observe the vow prescribed in the case of killing a brahman, while he himself conducted the sacrifice alone. When Arvāvasu came back, having observed the vow, Parāvasu caused him to be driven away from the sacrifice as a slayer of a brahman. The brahmarshi Arvāvasu went to the wood, and, applying to the Sun, he practised austerities and mastered the Rahasyaveda of the Sun. The Sun appeared to him in his embodied form, and said the gods were pleased by him. They elected Arvāvasu and rejected Parāvasu. The gods Agni, etc., granted him the boon that Raibhya, Bharadvāja, and Yavakrīta revived, that Parāvasu was absolved from his sin, that Raibhya did not recollect his having been slain, and that the Saura Veda should attain celebrity (pratishṭhāṃ). The gods explained to Yavakrīta that Raibhya had been able to kill him because he had acquired his knowledge with great exertion and in the course of a long time, while Yavakrīta had learnt the Vedas without exertion and without a guru. Then Indra and the gods returned to heaven (III, 138).

The offspring of Yadu (b), Turvasu (c), Druhyu (d), Anu (e), and Pūru (f) (I, 85): I, 84, 3466, (3467), (3474), (3478), 3481, (3482), (3485), (3488), (3490), (3492), (3498), 3499; 85, 3500 (Nahushātmajaḥ), 3504, 3517 (Nāhushaḥ), (3522).—§ 149 (i.e. Uttara-Yayātyupākhyāna, cf. Sambhavap.): Having installed Pūru on the throne, Y. entered the wood to lead the life of a hermit for 1,000 years and then ascended to Svarga (I, 86), where he was reverenced by the gods, the Sādhyas, the Maruts, and the Vasus, wandering about in Devaloka and Brahmaloka. One day Indra asked him what he had said to Pūru when he bestowed the kingdom upon him. Y. answered that he had said: "The whole country between the Gaṅgā and the Yamunā is thine, this is the central region of the earth, the outlying regions will be the dominions of thy brothers. Those without anger are ever superior to those under its sway, etc." (I, 87). As Y. said that he did not know his equal in ascetic austerities among men, gods, Gandharvas, and maharshis, Indra declared that, owing to this haughtiness, he should fall from heaven, yet he should fall among the virtuous. When falling, he was beheld by the rājarshi Ashṭaka (I, 88), of whom he was the maternal grandfather; Y. spoke disapprovingly of haughtiness, etc., and told that, leaving earth, he had obtained many high regions for 1,000 years, then he had dwelt in the town of Indra (having 1,000 gates and extending 1,000 yojanas all around) for 1,000 years, then for 1,000 years in the world of Prajāpati, then in the abode of Devadeva (i.e. Vishṇu); he had also dwelt in Nandana for 100 ayutas of years, assuming any form at will, sporting with the Apsarases; then there had come a messenger of the gods with a grim visage, who thrice had shouted to him "fall"; then he had fallen from Nandana, hearing, while falling, the compassionate exclamations of the gods, who had directed him to fall to the sacrificial place of Ashṭaka and his companions (I, 89). Y. continued: Those who speak of their own merits after having dwelt for 60,000 or 80,000 years in heaven, are doomed to suffer the pains of the hell called bhauma (i.e. existence on the earth), and are attacked by certain Rākshasas with sharp teeth. Y. then taught the lore of transmigration and emancipation (I, 90). Y. explained the duties of gṛhasthas, bhikshus, brahmacārins, and vānaprasthas, and the different kinds of munis and mauna (vows of silence) (I, 91). Y. then said: "I now shall fall into the bhauma hell, the Lokapas of Brahmán hasten me thither." The kings Ashṭaka, Pratardana (I, 92), Vasumanas Aushadaçvi, and Çibi Auçīnara, offered him their "lokas" and volunteered to go to hell (naraka) in his place; Y. did not accept the offer. Then appeared five golden chariots, in which they all five ascended to heaven, Çibi leaving the others behind him. Y. told them that he was their maternal grandfather, that he had given the whole earth with her horses, etc., to brahmans, and that the earth and the firmament and fire existed owing to his truth. *(I, 93): I, 86, 3535 (Nāhusho rājā), 3541, 3543, 3544 (Nāhushaḥ); 87, 3553, (3555); 88, †3564, (3565), (†3567), †3568, †3569; 89, (†3577), †3577 (Nahushasya putraḥ Pūroḥ pitā), (†3580), †3589, (†3591), †3598; 90, (†3601), (†3603), (†3606), (†3609), (†3613), (†3617), (†3621); 91, (†3628), (3635), (3637); 92, (3646), (†3651), (†3654), (†3656), (†3659), (†3661), †3663; 93, (†3665), (†3667), (†3670), (†3672), (3674), (3676), (3678), (3681), (†3684), †3684 (Nahushasya putraḥ Pūroḥ pitā).—§ 156 (Pūruvaṃç.): I, 95, ††3760 (son of Nahusha, husband of Devayānī and Çarmishṭhā, enumeration of his sons).—§ 267 (Yamasabhāv.): II, 8, 319 (in the palace of Yama).—§ 273 (Rājasūyārambhap.): II, 14, 570 (°es tv eva Bhojānāṃ vistaro guṇato mahān).—§ 296 (Dyūtap.): II, 56, 1930 (yathā).—§ 320 (Saubhavadhap.): III, 21, 841 (prapatataḥ Y°eḥ kshīnapuṇyasya svargād iva).—§ 345 (Nalopākhyānap.): III, 57, 2235 (īje cāpy açvamedhena Y°ir iva Nāhushaḥ).—§ 376 (Tīrthayātrāp.): III, 85, 8268 (yathā).—§ 377 (Dhaumyatīrthak.): III, 89, 8363 (Viçvāmitranadī . . . yāsyās tīre satāṃ madhye Y°ir Nahushātmajaḥ papāta sa punar lokāṃl lebhe dharmān sanātanān, cf. § 149).—§ 378 (Tīrthayātrāp.): III, 92, 8444 (yathā).—§ 402 (do.): III, 120, †10260 (nāthāḥ Çaibyādayaḥ . . . yathā Y°eḥ, all. to § 149).—§ 409*e* (Plakshāvataraṇag.): Y. competed with Indra. He fell down among his daughter's sons Pratardana, Vasumanas, Çibi, and Ashṭaka, in the Naimisha wood, where they performed a vājapeya sacrifice. They gave him their merits (puṇya, dharma, etc.), and the result of all their sacrifices. Mādhavī also came and gave him the moiety of hers, likewise Gālava, who gave him the eighth part of his (V, 121). As soon as Y. was recognized by those virtuous persons, he rose again to heaven without touching the surface of the earth, and his four daughter's sons, in a loud voice, repeated the gift of their merits (Ashṭaka had performed hundreds of puṇḍarīka, gosava, and vājapeya sacrifices, Çibi had never spoken a falsehood) (V, 122). Y. was honoured in heaven by G., Aps., D.-r,-R.-r, and the gods. Brahmán explained to him that it was his vanity alone that had been able to destroy all his merit (cf. also § 149). POSTSCRIPTUM.

The author of this work, the late Professor S. Sörensen (*23rd November, 1849—†8th December, 1902), was an eminent Sanskrit scholar. While an undergraduate he strenuously applied himself to the study of Classical Philology and Sanskrit at the University of Copenhagen, where he became a pupil of J. N. Madvig and N. L. Westergaard. In 1883 he took the degree of doctor of philosophy with a most valuable and comprehensive dissertation on the "Mahābhārata and its Place in Indian Literature", in which he made an attempt at determining the oldest elements of that great epic. Unfortunately he only obtained the professorship of Indian Philology in the Copenhagen University at an advanced age. In 1902, a short time before his premature death, he succeeded V. Fausböll in the only chair of Indian Philology in the Copenhagen University.

He began to collect the materials for the present work as long ago as about the year 1880, and continued it under great difficulties and self-sacrifice. In the year 1902 the work was so far advanced that he could commence printing, but only the first four sheets (pages 1–32) had been put into type before his death. The manuscript of the preface, the concordance, and pages 33–153 had been put into final shape by him, whilst the materials for the rest of the work were left unrevised. In these circumstances it was resolved that the work should be continued, and the revision and final preparation of the manuscript was, under the superintendence of the undersigned D. Andersen, committed to the undersigned E. Olesen, who had already assisted the author for two years.

During the further revision, however, it was found that the collection of the material had partly been provisional, and some time had to be spent in completing it. Furthermore, it was considered advisable to add a selection of the various readings from the Bombay Edition. This accounts for the rather numerous Additions and Corrections. Several other difficulties arose during the preparation and printing of the work, especially in the time of the Great War, but they were all overcome and now we are amply rewarded for all our efforts in being able to place the great work of our compatriot before the learned world.

Our sincere thanks are due to Professor Sten Konow and to Sir George A. Grierson, who both of them have read all the proofs and given us many valuable hints. Also the printers deserve our best thanks for their accurate and skilful work. No less thanks are due to the publishers, who have been ready to carry out this far from lucrative undertaking.

Finally, we acknowledge with the deepest gratitude the subventions which have been granted by The Danish Government, The Carlsberg Fund, The Rask-Oersted Fund, and the India Office, which gracefully granted its support to the undertaking in subscribing to a number of copies.
