Draupadīharaṇa(ṃ) parva. § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 325 (i.e. Draupadīharaṇaparvan).

[Draupadīharaṇaparvan] ("the carrying away of Draupadī," the 46th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). (Cf. Draupadīharaṇa(ṃ) parva.) § 521: While Duryodhana, Duḥçāsana, Karṇa, and Çakuni were longing to harm the Pāṇḍavas, Durvāsas arrived with 10,000 disciples, and harassed Duryodhana with his whimsical and insolent behaviour; but as Duryodhana was neither angered nor annoyed, he granted him a boon. According to what had been agreed upon between himself and Karṇa and Duḥçāsana, Duryodhana asked Durvāsas to visit the Pāṇḍavas with his disciples, when Draupadī, after having regaled the brahmans, etc., with food, would have gone to rest. Durvāsas promised to do so (III, 262). Then Durvāsas one day came to the Pāṇḍavas with 10,000 disciples, when the meal was over and Kṛshṇā was reposing. Kṛshṇā then praised Kṛshṇa, who, leaving Rukmiṇī, who was sleeping by his side, came to her and demanded something to eat. Draupadī became embarrassed, because the sun-given vessel only remained full till she had finished her meal, and therefore now was empty. At the request of Kṛshṇa she, however, fetched the vessel, and Kṛshṇa found a particle of rice and vegetable sticking at its rim, and swallowing it he said to her: "May it please the god who is the soul of the universe (viçvātmā), and may the partaker of sacrifices (yajñabhuk) be satisfied." Then he ordered Bhīma (B. Sahadeva) to invite the munis to dinner. Meanwhile those ascetics, having bathed in the river, observed that their stomachs were full, and as Durvāsas feared that the Pāṇḍavas would destroy them, looking down upon them with angry eyes, because the repast had been uselessly prepared for them ("I am afraid," said Durvāsas, "of men that are devoted to Hari"), they all ran away, so that Bhīma (B. Sahadeva) sought for them in vain. As the Pāṇḍavas were afraid that the munis might return at night and curse them, Kṛshṇa suddenly appeared and consoled them. Then he repaired to his capital (III, 263).—§ 522: One day when the Pāṇḍavas had gone a-hunting, leaving Draupadī in the hermitage with the permission of the great ṛshi Tṛṇabindu and of Dhaumya, the king of Sindhu (of Sauvīra, v. 15599; of the Çibis, Sauvīras, Sindhus, etc., 15621), Jayadratha Vārddhakshattri, who, with a view of matrimony, was on his way to the king of the Çālveyas, halted in the wood of Kāmyaka, and seeing Draupadī standing at the threshold of the hermitage, he fell in love with her, and sent king Koṭikāsya (king Suratha's son, v. 15593; the foremost of the Çibis, v. 15602) to inquire who she was (III, 264). Koṭikāsya introduced himself to Draupadī and showed her the Trigarta king Kshemaṅkara, and the son of the king of the Kulindas ("who always lives in the mountains"), and the son of Subala (B. Subhava) of the race of Ikshvāku; he said that Jayadratha was there at the head of 6,000 chariots, etc., followed by twelve Sauvīra princes as his standard-bearers (Aṅgāraka, etc., enumerated) (a), and his brothers (Balāhaka, Anīka, Vidāraṇa, etc.) (III, 265). Draupadī told Koṭikāsya who she was, and that her husbands were out a-hunting (Yudhishṭhira to the east, Bhīma towards the south, Arjuna to the west, and the Açvins towards the north), and invited them to alight and await the return of the Pāṇḍavas (III, 266). Koṭikāsya told Jayadratha the words of Draupadī, and exhorted him to take her with him to the Sauvīras. Jayadratha introduced himself to Draupadī, who offered him water for washing his feet, and promised him fifty animals for breakfast and various kinds of deer, etc., etc. (enumerated), when Yudhishṭhira returned. Jayadratha asked her to leave the miserable Pāṇḍavas and become his wife (III, 267), but was severely rebuked by Draupadī, who threatened him with the Pāṇḍavas. As Jayadratha said, "We too belong by birth to the seventeen high clans, and look down upon the Pāṇḍavas," she threatened him with Kṛshṇa and Arjuna, and the Andhakas, Vṛshṇis, and Kaikeyas, and called upon Dhaumya. Jayadratha seized her by her upper garment; Draupadī pushed him so that he fell upon the ground; but at last she was obliged to ascend his chariot, while Dhaumya followed amidst Jayadratha's infantry (III, 268). When the Pāṇḍavas again met, Yudhishṭhira knew from the shrill cries of the birds that the forest had been invaded by hostile intruders, and he caused them to give up the chase and drive home on their great chariots drawn by Saindhava horses. A yellow jackal on their left indicated the violence done. Indrasena learned what had happened from the weeping foster-sister of Draupadī, and then they pursued and overtook Jayadratha, who was greatly alarmed (III, 269). Draupadī, asked by Jayadratha, pointed out to him each of the five Pāṇḍavas, and advised him to throw down his arms and seek the protection of Yudhishṭhira, at the top of whose flagstaff two tabours called Nanda and Upananda are constantly played. The Pāṇḍavas, leaving the panic-stricken infantry alone, rushed upon the charioteers [so PCR., who seems to have read rathānīkaṃ, which is, to be sure, the right reading, instead of yathānīkaṃ, which occurs both in C. and B.] (III, 270). Bhīma with his iron mace (sarvaçaikyāyasīṃ gadāṃ), embossed with gold, rushed towards Jayadratha, who was defended by Koṭikāsya. The Trigarta king, who had killed the four steeds of Yudhishṭhira with his mace, was himself killed by Yudhishṭhira, who then, together with Indrasena, mounted the chariot of Sahadeva. Nakula killed Kshemaṅkara and Mahāmukha, and was compelled by the Trigarta king Suratha (whom he killed?) to mount Bhīma's chariot. Bhīma put Koṭikāsya to flight and slew him. Arjuna killed the twelve Sauvīra heroes, etc.; Jayadratha put Draupadī down and fled. Yudhishṭhira, seeing Draupadī and Dhaumya walking in front, caused her to be taken up on the chariot of Sahadeva. Arjuna advised Bhīma to refrain from slaying the remnant of the Saindhava host. Bhīma prevailed upon Yudhishṭhira to return to the hermitage with the twins and Draupadī and Dhaumya, while he himself would find out and slay Jayadratha. Yudhishṭhira entreated him not to slay him, remembering Duḥçalā and Gāndhārī; but Draupadī indignantly required that he should be slain, and Bhīma and Arjuna went in search of him. In the hermitage Yudhishṭhira found Mārkaṇḍeya and many other brahmans and ascetics, who were greatly bewailing the lot of Draupadī. Meanwhile Arjuna killed the horses of Jayadratha, though they were a full kroça ahead of him. Jayadratha was then overtaken by Bhīma, but Arjuna entreated Bhīma not to kill him (III, 271).

Draupadīja, pl. (°āḥ) ("sons of Draupadī") = Draupadeya, pl.: VIII, †4202.

[Draupadīparitāpavākya(ṃ)] ("the complaints of Draupadī"; cf. Arjunābhigamanaparvan). § 325: While they were conversing in the evening, filled with sorrow, Kṛshṇā, who wondered at the hardheartedness of Duryodhana, Karṇa, Çakuni, and Duḥçāsana, who were the only four that did not shed tears at their being exiled, and who lamented their present state so different from their former happiness, tried to excite Yudhishṭhira to revenge himself (III, 27).—§ 326: Draupadī related the old story of the conversation between Prahlāda (the chief of the Asuras and the Dānavas, well versed in the mysteries of the science of duty) and his grandson Bali Vairocana, in which Prahlāda told Bali that neither might nor forgiveness is invariably meritorious, and then she said: "I therefore consider, O king! that time has come for thee to put forth thy might" (III, 28).—§ 327: Yudhishṭhira maintained that a wise man should ever forgive his persecutor; that wrath has been given to man for the destruction of the world; and cited gāthās of the forgiving Kāçyapa: "Forgiveness is virtue, sacrifice, the Vedas, etc.; men of forgiveness obtain regions in the Brahmaloka; when one forgives everything, then he becomes bráhman (brahma sampadyate); this and the other world belongs to him who forgives, etc." (III, 29). From the fact that pious persons are often unhappy (v. 1133, Yudhishṭhira is said to have performed the açvamedha (!), rājasūya, puṇḍarīka, and gosava sacrifices) and vicious persons happy, Draupadī concludes that Dhātṛ and Vidhātṛ have clouded Yudhishṭhira's senses, that it is folly to aspire to final emancipation (moksha), that the consequences of acts are inevitable, that God (Īçvara, Dhātṛ, Svayambhū Prapitāmaha) makes creatures to work as a wooden doll is made to move its limbs by a wire-puller, etc., and causes them to destroy each other, that God does not behave towards his creatures like a father or mother, but like a vicious person; either God is sinful, or Might (and not God) is the true cause of acts, and then those are to be pitied that have no might (III, 30). Yudhishṭhira censured Kṛshṇā for her atheism (nāstikya), saying that one should not act virtuously from the desire of reaping fruits, but because it is ordained so by the Veda, the ancient religion revealed by the ṛshis, and because it is the conduct of the good and wise; neither should one doubt virtue or religion nor censure God, by whose grace mortal man, by piety, acquires immortality. For though we may not see the results, being mysterious even to the gods, and the illusion (māyā) of the gods is mysterious to us, yet virtue and vice are not fruitless, as may be seen from the examples of Vyāsa, Vasishṭha, Maitreya, Nārada, Lomaça, Çuka, and other ṛshis, who by virtue have become superior even to the gods; as also from her own and Dhṛshṭadyumna's birth; nor would men have practised virtue, generation after generation, if asceticism, etc., were useless, and no one would pursue salvation (nirvāṇa), but they would live like beasts, and why should ṛshis, gods, Gandharvas, Rākshasas, and Asuras, who are above human conditions (īçvarāḥ), cherish virtue? He who, trusting the proofs of his own reasoning, rejects other authority or doubts religion and virtue, loses this and yonder world, and is lower than even çūdras and robbers (III, 31). Kṛshṇā said that she did not slander religion nor disregard God (Īçvara, Prajāpati, Maheçvara); it was affliction that had extorted these words from her. She maintained that besides what a man obtains from Necessity (haṭha), Fate (daiva), Accident (svabhāva), and deeds in a former life (karman) (all of which might be reduced to the last item, also called adṛçya), which God distributes, there are also things of which man himself is the cause, working through his own intelligence and exertion. It is by exertion (utthāna; the explanation of Nīl. here seems to be inadmissible) that all creatures live, even Dhātṛ and Vidhātṛ, as well as the crane on the water. Those who believe only in Destiny (dishṭa) or Necessity are both the meanest among men. On the other hand, if God were not the giver of good and bad fruits, there would not be any creature that was miserable, and all exertions would be successful. Manu himself declares that a man should act; and if he works, even if he be not successful, his debt is cancelled. "Having exerted thyself, thou wilt know what the fruit of thy exertions will be. The tiller tills the soil with the plough, and sows the seed thereon; he then sits silent, for the clouds are now the cause; and if no rain favours him, the tiller is without blame . . . If, however, no exertion is made, there can be no success . . . All this, uttered by Bṛhaspati himself, a learned brahman said to my father and my brothers; from them I heard it" (III, 32). Bhīma tried to prevail upon Yudhishṭhira that (especially as they had lost the sovereignty by his carelessness) he should make war with the Dhārtarāshṭras, aided by the Sṛñjayas and Kaikeyas and Kṛshṇa, maintaining that a man should practise virtue (dharma) for the sake of gaining wealth (artha), and acquire wealth for the sake of pleasure (kāma), but neither for its own sake; that might and energy (and the protecting of the subjects) constitute the virtue of the Kshatriya, and that deviation from the virtues of one's own order is never laudable; that the Asuras, though elder brothers in possession of power and abundance, were all vanquished by the gods through stratagem; that as wealth should be spent by one who wishes to increase his wealth, just as seeds are scattered on the ground, thus a person who throws away a little of his virtue like seeds (dharma) in order to gain a larger measure of virtue is regarded as wise, and that whatever sin a monarch commits in acquiring dominion, he cancels it all afterwards by sacrifices and by bestowing villages, etc., on brahmans (III, 33). Yudhishṭhira declared that he was unable to violate the pledge, and that it was now too late for Bhīma to use harsh words (III, 34). Bhīma said that only he whose life is unlimited, or who knows what the period of his life is, has time to wait; they ought to strive for the possession of the kingdom before they died; "if a man, slaying his injurer, goes the very day into hell, that hell becomes heaven to him; the pain one feels in having to suppress his wrath is more burning than fire itself; . . . thou art kind like a brahman, how hast thou been born in the Kshatriya order? those who are born in this order are generally of cruel hearts; thou hast heard the duties of kings, as promulgated by Manu, cruel and fraught with crookedness and opposed to tranquillity (çama); moreover, we will not be able to live unknown, as we are known all over the world, and many kings, who have been expelled by us from their kingdoms, and robbed and exiled by us, will assist Duryodhana and set against us numerous spies in disguise; we have now lived in the woods for thirteen months, which may be regarded as so many years, as pūtikas (see BR. and Nīl.) are a substitute for the soma; or one may free himself from this sin by offering food to a bull" (see Nīl.) (III, 35).

Draupadīputra, pl. ("the sons of Draupadī") = Draupadeya, pl.: VI, 1655, 2755; X, 365.

[Draupadī-sambhava(ḥ)] ("origin of Draupadī"). § 218 (Caitrarathap.): Distressed and thinking of revenging himself on Droṇa, not contented with his children and relatives, king Drupada wandered along the Yamunā and the Gaṅgā and came to a hermitage of brahmans, and prevailed upon Yāja (b) to perform a sacrifice for him, assisted by his brother Upayāja, in order to obtain a son who might slay Droṇa. Then Yāja summoned the queen (Pṛshatī, v. 6390; Pārshatī, v. 6405; "daughter-in-law of Pṛshata," PCR.), but she said that she was not fit for accepting the offspring (?), her mouth being unclean (avalipta) and her person perfumed. Yāja replied: "Since the sacrifice has been prepared (çrapitaṃ) by Yāja and sanctified by Upayāja's invocations (abhimantritaṃ), it shall produce its effect whether thou comest or waitest." Then arose from the flames a boy with a crown on his head, his body being arrayed in excellent armour, sword in hand and carrying a bow and arrows, sending forth loud roars, and immediately ascending a chariot. A great invisible being in the skies said that he would destroy Droṇa, etc. After this Pāñcālī arose from the centre of the vedī, and a voice, not coming from a visible body, said that she would be the cause of the destruction of many kshatriyas. At the birth of both children the Pāñcālas shouted with joy. The queen was regarded as their mother. Then the brahmans gave to the boy the name of Dhṛshṭadyumna, on account of his audacity, etc. (dhṛshṭatvād atidhṛshṇutvād dyumnādyutsambhavād api, v. 6406), and to the girl that of Kṛshṇā, on account of her dark complexion (v. 6407). Droṇa brought Dhṛshṭadyumna to his own abode, and taught him the use of all weapons, considering that destiny is inevitable (I, 167).

[Draupadī-Satyabhāmā-saṃvādaparvan] ("conversation between Draupadī and Satyabhāmā," the 42nd of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). § 510: After the brahmans and Pāṇḍavas had taken their seats, Draupadī and Satyabhāmā ¦Sātrājitī, the favourite wife of Kṛshṇa, entered the hermitage. Satyabhāmā asked Draupadī how she made the Pāṇḍavas obedient to her, in order that she herself might by the same means secure the affection of Kṛshṇa. Draupadī warned her against using drugs, incantations, etc., which were used by wicked women, and said that she kept aloof from vanity and served the Pāṇḍavas with devotion, etc. Formerly, in the palace of Yudhishṭhira at Indraprastha, food was daily given to 8,000 brahmans, 80,000 snātakas with thirty serving-maids assigned to each, 10,000 yatis; he had 100,000 well-dressed serving-maids with bracelets, etc., all skilled in singing and dancing; 100,000 maidservants who day and night used to feed guests; 100,000 horses, and 100,000 elephants. And it was Draupadī who had the supervision of all this; she knew the names and features of all the girls, and knew everything about them, and even about the cowherds and shepherds. She alone knew the income and expenditure of the king and what their whole wealth was, bearing hunger and thirst, and being the first to wake up and the last to go to bed (III, 233). Draupadī said that for women there is no god equal to the husband, as it is from him the wife obtains offspring, articles of enjoyment, fame, and heaven itself hereafter. In order to attract the heart of Kṛshṇa, Satyabhāmā ought to let him understand that she adored him with all her heart by promptly, when she saw him enter her chamber, offering him a seat and water to wash his feet; and even if he ordered a maidservant to do anything, she ought to get up and do it herself; not to blab of whatever he should speak before her; feed those that were dear to him, and keep herself aloof from those that were hostile to him; not to stay or converse in private even with her sons Pradyumna and Çāmba; and shun wicked women (III, 234).—§ 511: Then Kṛshṇa bade farewell to the Pāṇḍavas and to Mārkaṇḍeya, etc., and called for Satyabhāmā. Satyabhāmā comforted Draupadī, saying that she would soon recover her ancient happiness, and relating of Prativindhya, Çrutasoma, and Çrutakarman (her son by Arjuna), and Çatānīka (her son by Nakula), and Çrutasena (her son by Sahadeva), that they were well and skilled in weapons and, like Abhimanyu, delighted with staying at Dvāravatī, and were loved by Subhadrā, Pradyumna, Kṛshṇa, with his son Bhānu, etc., and her mother-in-law, and all the Andhakas and Vṛshṇis, with Rāma, etc. Then Satyabhāmā mounted the chariot of Kṛshṇa and they set out for his city (III, 235).

Droṇa,[1] the preceptor of the Dhārtarāshṭras and the Pāṇḍavas, Dhṛshṭadyumna, etc., son of Bharadvāja, husband of Kṛpī, and father of Açvatthāman. § 4 (Anukram.): I, 1, 138, †186, †194, †196, †199 (Ācāryaṃ), †201.—§ 9 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 300.—§ 11 (do.): I, 2, 537.—§ 83 (Ādivaṃçāvatāraṇa): I, 63, 2436 (father of Açvatthāman), 2438 (Dhṛshṭadyumna was born for the destruction of D.).—§ 130 (Aṃçāvat.): I, 67, 2705 (Bhāradvājaṃ, born from a portion of Bṛhaspati), 2707 (Dhanurvede Vede ca yaṃ taṃ Vedavido viduḥ varishṭhaṃ). — § 199 (Sambhavap.): Bhīshma prevailed upon D. to accept the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas as his pupils in the Dhanurveda: I, 130, 5096 (Bhāradvājāya).—§ 200 (do.): Janamejaya said: "Tell me about the birth of Droṇa and of his son Açvatthāman." Vaiçampāyana said: The ṛshi Bharadvāja who dwelt at Gaṅgādvāra one day saw the Apsaras Ghṛtācī coming from her bath; then his seed came out, but was preserved by him in a vessel (droṇa); from that seed sprang D., who studied the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas. Bharadvāja had taught Agniveça the use of the Āgneya weapon, and the muni who had sprung from Fire (i.e. Agniveça) now taught it to D.: I, 130, 5100, 5106.—§ 201 (do.): D. was a friend of Drupada (q.v.). Droṇa remained in the hermitage of his father and practised austerities. With Kṛpī Çāradvatī he had the son Açvatthāman (b). D. studied the Dhanurveda. About this time Rāma Jāmadagnya desired to distribute his wealth among the brahmans, and Droṇa (of the race of Aṅgiras, v. 5122) with his disciples set out for the mountain Mahendra to have his share in the wealth and learn from Rāma the Dhanurveda, the use of celestial weapons, and the nītiçāstra. When he arrived, Rāma had already given his wealth to the brahmans and the earth to Kaçyapa; he then asked D. to choose either his body or his weapons. Droṇa accepted the weapons and the Dhanurveda, and then repaired to Drupada: I, 130, 5110, 5114, 5122, 5124, 5130, (5131).—§ 202 (do.): As Drupada rebuked him for calling him his friend, D., filled with wrath, went to Hāstinapura, where he for some time lived privately in the house of Kṛpa (his brother-in-law), while Açvatthāman, being unknown, taught the Pārthas (i.e. the Pāṇḍavas) the use of arms. One day, when D. had by means of blades of grass, which were consecrated by mantras, recovered a ball which the princes had lost in a well, and, by means of an arrow, his ring which he had thrown into the well, he was called to Bhīshma, whom he told that he had applied to Drupada in order to obtain milk for Açvatthāman (b), but had been rebuked by him. Bhīshma asked D. to make the princes accomplished in arms: I, 131, 5136, 5155, 5158, (5160), 5162, 5164, 5167, (5168), 5170, 5171, (5172), 5177, 5188.—§ 203 (do.): Bhīshma presented D. with a pretty house, etc., and gave the Dhārtarāshṭras and the Pāṇḍavas to him as his pupils. Arjuna (b) became the foremost of D.'s pupils, even superior to Açvatthāman (c). Also the Vṛshṇis and the Andhakas and princes from various countries became his pupils. Even Karṇa came to learn the Dhanurveda; he, supported by Duryodhana, frequently defied Arjuna: I, 132, 5211, 5214, (5216), 5219, 5220, 5223, 5225, 5228, 5230, 5231, 5236, (5237), 5238, 5239.—§ 204 (Ekalavya): I, 132, 5241, 5243, 5246, 5255 (°çishyaṃ, i.e. Ekalavya), 5256, 5260, 5262, 5263, 5264, 5266, 5269 (D. asked the thumb of the right hand of Ekalavya as his tutorial fee, in order that Ekalavya might not surpass the Pāṇḍavas). — § 205 (Sambhavap.): The foremost pupils of Droṇa were Duryodhana, Bhīmasena, Açvatthāman (b), Nakula (c) and Sahadeva (c), Yudhishṭhira (d), and Arjuna (e). The Dhārtarāshṭras became very jealous of Bhīma and Arjuna: I, 132, 5270.—§ 206 (do.): One day D. caused an artificial bird to be placed on the top of a tree, and first repeatedly asked Yudhishṭhira, when he stood aiming at the bird, what he did see. He answered that he saw the tree, D., his brothers, and the bird. D. reproachingly told him to stand apart. Then D. repeated the experiment with his other pupils with the same result (I, 132). At last Arjuna's turn came; he said first that he saw only the vulture, and then that he saw only its head, and when D. gave the order he struck off the head of the bird with his shaft: I, 132, 5276, (5278), 5282, (5284), 5286; 133, 5289, 5292, 5293, 5294, 5296.—§ 207 (do.): Arjuna rescued the life of D. by shooting with five arrows an alligator in the Gaṅgā, which had seized the thigh of D. D. gave Arjuna the weapon Brahmaçiras on condition that he should not use it against a human foe, as it might consume the whole universe (I, 133): I, 133, 5300, 5303.—§ 208 (Astradarçana): I, 134, 5312; 135, (5350), 5352, 5376; 136, 5384, 5390, 5399; 137, 5433, 5439 (the disciples of D. displayed their prowess in the use of arms).—§ 209 (Drupadaçāsana): I, 138, 5445, 5447, 5454, 5466, 5502, 5503, 5511, 5513, 5515, 5516 (assisted by his pupils, D. vanquished Drupada, but restored the half of his kingdom to him, and thenceforth he himself ruled the other half, residing in Ahicchatra).—§ 210*c* (Arjuna): I, 139, 5523, 5524, 5529, 5533 (D. had obtained the Brahmaçiras from Agniveça and given it to Arjuna (cf. § 207); Arjuna promised to fight with D. [in the great battle]).—§ 213 (Jatugṛhap.): I, 142, 5688, 5691, 5692; 143, 5707; 145, 5735; 150, 5860.—§ 216 (Caitrarathap.): I, 165, 6326 (preceptor of Dhṛshṭadyumna).—§ 217 (do.): I, 166, 6332, 6334, 6335, 6336, (6338), 6339, 6340, 6345, 6347, 6349, (6350), 6352, 6354 (repetition of the history of D. from his birth to the division of Drupada's kingdom, cf. §§ 200–9). — § 218 (Draupadīsambhava): I, 167, 6358, 6359, 6366, 6377, 6378, 6380, 6385 (°āntakaṃ), 6386, 6397 (°vadhāya), 6409 (Drupada performed a sacrifice in order to obtain a son who might slay D.; then Dhṛshṭadyumna arose from the fire. D. became his preceptor).— § 221 (Caitrarathap.): I, 170, 6465 (had learnt the use of the Āgneya weapon from Agniveça, and again taught it to Arjuna).—§ 231 (Svayaṃvarap.): I, 184, 6932 (*Dhṛshṭadyumnasya . . . [Droṇābhishekaparvan] ("the section relating to the inauguration of Droṇa," the 71st of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Droṇābhishecana). § 589: Janamejaya enquired of the state of Dhṛtarāshṭra on the receipt of intelligence of Bhīshma's death. Vaiçampāyana's answer: Dhṛtarāshṭra asked Sañjaya about what the Kauravas did after the fall of Bhīshma. Sañjaya mentioned the arrow-pillow, etc. (cf. § 587 foll.), and that the warriors once more went to battle. The Kurus desired to make Karṇa their generalissimo (mentioning his enmity with Bhīshma) (VII, 1). Karṇa eulogised Bhīshma, and promised to be their leader, mentioning the prowess of Yudhishṭhira, etc. (a); he commanded his charioteer to make his chariot ready (VII, 2). Karṇa waited upon Bhīshma (mentioning the danger to the Kurus from Arjuna with the Gāṇḍīva, etc.; Arjuna's battle with Çiva; Kṛshṇa; Bhīshma's battle with Rāma) (VII, 3). Bhīshma, mentioning Karṇa's prowess against the Kāmbojas, etc. (β), urged him to fight for the victory of Duryodhana. Then Karṇa saluted Bhīshma, and, at his return, was worshipped by Duryodhana and the Kauravas (VII, 4). Duryodhana asked Karṇa's advice as to who should become the generalissimo of the Kuru army. Karṇa proposed Droṇa (VII, 5). Duryodhana requested Droṇa to take the command (VII, 6). Droṇa, mentioning his knowledge of the Veda and the Çaiva weapon, etc., and his inability to slay Dhṛshṭadyumna, accepted the request. Duryodhana and the kings performed the inauguration of Droṇa, at which the army rejoiced. Droṇa arrayed the troops: the Sindhu king, etc. (γ), in the right wing, supported by Çakuni, etc.; Kṛpa, etc. (δ), in the left wing, supported by the Kāmbojas, etc. (ϵ); the Madras, etc. (ζ), in the rear; Karṇa at the head of all the bowmen. The array was in the form of a çakaṭa (cart). Yudhishṭhira disposed his troops in the form of a krauñca (crane), with Kṛshṇa and Arjuna at the head. Omens appeared when Droṇa proceeded to battle. The Pāṇḍavas and Sṛñjayas were broken by Droṇa. Dhṛshṭadyumna & Droṇa (VII, 7). Yudhishṭhira urged Dhṛshṭadyumna and Arjuna to check Droṇa. The Kekaya princes, etc. (η), "achieved diverse feats." Droṇa put the Pāṇḍava troops to rout. Droṇa & the Kekaya princes, etc. (θ). At last Droṇa, having slain more than two akshauhiṇīs, "proceeded hence to heaven" ("attained to the highest state") slain by Dhṛshṭadyumna. D., P., etc., beheld him (VII, 8). Dhṛtarāshṭra asked Sañjaya the particulars of Droṇa's heroism and slaughter (mentioning his knowledge of the Vedas; his ability to remove Meru; his equality to Bṛhaspati or Uçanas; his horses of the Sindhu breed, etc. (ι)) (VII, 9). Dhṛtarāshṭra swooned away, and was restored to consciousness by the Bharata ladies. Then he enquired of Sañjaya about Yudhishṭhira, etc. (κ), especially Yuyudhāna Sātyaki (b), and Dhṛshṭaketu (c), and Ketumat (d); and the children of Dhṛshṭadyumna, Kshatrañjaya, etc. (λ), who, giving up all sports for twelve years, and observing excellent vows, waited upon Bhīshma for the sake of weapons; and the five Kaikeya brothers (e); and Yuyutsu (f), and Dhṛshṭadyumna (g) (VII, 10). Dhṛtarāshṭra recited the feats of Kṛshṇa: the killing of Hayarāja, etc. (μ), that he had vanquished in battle the Aṅgas, etc. (ν), and that if Kṛshṇa would summon them, Gada, etc. (ξ), would take up their position in the Pāṇḍava host; and regretted that Duryodhana did not know Kṛshṇa and Arjuna; the destruction of the Kurus he attributed to himself or to Destiny (VII, 11).—§ 590: Sañjaya begins his narrative in detail. THE ELEVENTH DAY'S BATTLE: Duryodhana, having consulted with Karṇa and Duḥçāsana, etc., asked Droṇa to seize Yudhishṭhira alive. Droṇa became very glad because Duryodhana had not asked him to slay Yudhishṭhira. Duryodhana explained that if Yudhishṭhira were slain, the other Pāṇḍavas, who were invincible, would avenge him; but taken alive, he might be once more vanquished at dice, and so all the Pāṇḍavas be obliged once more to go to the woods. Droṇa said that he would seize Yudhishṭhira if not protected by Arjuna (with his weapons from Indra and Rudra, etc.); Arjuna, therefore, must be withdrawn from Yudhishṭhira. Duryodhana proclaimed the promise of Droṇa to all his troops, in order to make him stick to his promise (VII, 12). Yudhishṭhira learned through his spies that Droṇa had promised to seize him, and addressed his brothers and allies; Arjuna consoled him. A fierce battle commenced. Protected by Droṇa and Arjuna, both hosts seemed to stand inactive. The Pāṇḍavas could not withstand Droṇa, who began to consume the division of Dhṛshṭadyumna (VII, 13). Droṇa caused a river of blood to flow there. Yudhishṭhira & Droṇa; Çakuni & Sahadeva; Droṇa & Dhṛshṭadyumna; Bhīmasena & Viviṃçati; Çalya & Nakula; Dhṛshṭaketu & Kṛpa; Sātyaki & Kṛtavarman; Senāpati & Suçarman; Virāṭa (with the Matsyas) & Karṇa; Drupada & Bhagadatta; Bhūriçravas & Çikhaṇḍin; Ghaṭotkaca & Alambusha; Cekitāna & Anuvinda; Lakshmaṇa & Kshatradeva; Paurava & Abhimanyu; Paurava was rescued by Kṛtavarman, and then by Jayadratha; Abhimanyu (letting Paurava alone) & Jayadratha, who was vanquished; Çalya & Abhimanyu; Virāṭa, etc. (α), praised Abhimanyu; Dhṛtarāshṭra's sons + Çalya & Abhimanyu (VII, 14); Bhīmasena + Abhimanyu & Çalya; Bhīmasena (causing Abhimanyu to stand aside) & Çalya; both fell down; Kṛtavarman took Çalya away on his chariot; the Pāṇḍavas vanquished the Dhārtarāshṭras (VII, 15). Karṇa's son Vṛshasena attacked the Pāṇḍava army; Nakula's son Çatānīka & Vṛshasena; the Draupadeyāḥ + the Pāṇḍavas & Vṛshasena + Açvatthāman, etc.; especially Bhīma, etc. (β). The Kuru army was broken. Droṇa & Yudhishṭhira; the Pāñcāla prince Kumāra (the protector of Yudhishṭhira's car-wheels) & Droṇa; Droṇa & Çikhaṇḍin, etc. (γ); Droṇa caused Yugandhara to fall down from the seat of his chariot; Virāṭa, etc. (δ), & Droṇa; Vyāghradatta (the Pāñcāla prince) & Droṇa; Siṃhasena & Droṇa, who slew both Siṃhasena and Vyāghradatta; Arjuna, in order to rescue Yudhishṭhira, attacked Droṇa's division. Just then the sun set. Droṇa and Duryodhana, etc., withdrew their troops, and so did Arjuna. The Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ε), praised Arjuna (VII, 16).

Droṇavadha ("the slaughter of Droṇa"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 345 (°aḥ parva, i.e. Droṇavadhaparvan).

[Droṇavadhaparvan] ("the section including the slaughter of Droṇa," the 77th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Droṇavadha). § 601: CONTINUATION OF THE NIGHT AFTER THE FOURTEENTH DAY: According to the words of Vyāsa, Yudhishṭhira refrained from himself seeking to slay Karṇa, but was filled with grief and anger because Karṇa had slain Ghaṭotkaca. Beholding the Kurus held in check by Bhīma, he told Dhṛshṭadyumna, etc. (α), to attack Droṇa, who received them; Duryodhana, etc., came to Droṇa's rescue; a fierce battle ensued between the two hosts; both armies became sorely afflicted with fatigue and blind with sleep. Arjuna granted permission to the warriors to sleep. D., R., and the soldiers applauded Arjuna; the Kurus asked Karṇa and Duryodhana to abstain from the fight; all the combatants laid themselves down on the field to sleep (description); the Kaurava troops blessed Arjuna for his act of kindness. When the moon rose, both hosts, rising from sleep, again prepared for battle (VII, 184). Duryodhana taxed Droṇa wrathfully for his kindness to the Pāṇḍavas (β); Droṇa in wrath promised to slay all the Pāñcālas, and described the measure of Arjuna's might and prowess (γ). Duryodhana vowed that he, etc. (δ), that very day would slay Arjuna, dividing the Bharata host into two divisions. Droṇa ridiculed Duryodhana (ε), saying that it was only right that Duryodhana or Çakuni, who were the root of the hostility, should proceed against Arjuna, instead of causing all the unoffending Kshatriyas to be slain, and that he should accomplish his boasting vow before Dhṛtarāshṭra, and that he and Karṇa and Duḥçāsana would slay the Pāṇḍavas; moreover, he had done all in life that one should do. The army then was divided into two bodies, and the battle commenced (VII, 185).—§ 602: THE FIFTEENTH DAY: When three-quarters of that night had worn away, the battle once more commenced. At sunrise both hosts, alighting from their chariots, etc., uttered the prayers of the twilight. After the Kuru army had been divided into two bodies, Droṇa, with Duryodhana before him, proceeded against the Somakas, the Pāṇḍavas, and the Pāñcālas. Urged by Kṛshṇa, Arjuna moved to the left of Droṇa and Karṇa. Bhīma urged Arjuna to put forth all his vigour. Arjuna & Droṇa & Karṇa, etc. (ζ) (description). Droṇa moved away towards the north; the Pāṇḍava troops began to tremble; the Pāñcālas & Droṇa; Drupada and Virāṭa + the three grandsons of Drupada + the Cedis & Droṇa, who slew the three grandsons of Drupada, vanquished the Cedis, etc. (η), and slew Drupada and Virāṭa. Dhṛshṭadyumna swore to slay Droṇa that very day; Drupada with his division (from one side) + Arjuna (from another side) & Droṇa + Duryodhana, etc. (θ); Bhīma urged Dhṛshṭadyumna, and they both attacked Droṇa's division (description); soon the morning sun arose (VII, 186). The warriors adored the Sun, as he rose, and the battle once more commenced (description); neither Karṇa, etc. (ι), could be seen for dust. Duryodhana, etc. (κ), engaged in battle with four of the Pāṇḍava warriors: Duryodhana + his brothers & Nakula and Sahadeva; Karṇa & Bhīma; Droṇa & Arjuna; Nakula was worsted by Duryodhana (VII, 187); Sahadeva slew Duḥçāsana's driver; Duḥçāsana was worsted by Sahadeva; Bhīma jumped into the chariot of Nakula; Droṇa invoked the Aindra, etc. (λ), weapons; D., G., Ṛ., Si., Aps., Y., and Rā. applauded Droṇa and Arjuna, saying that "this is no human, etc. (μ), but a high Brāhma encounter"; both employed the Brāhma weapon; the engagement became general (VII, 188). Duḥçāsana & Dhṛshṭadyumna, who vanquished him and proceeded against Droṇa. Kṛtavarman + three of his brothers & Dhṛshṭadyumna + Nakula and Sahadeva, who checked them (enumeration of unfair weapons that were not used); Dhṛshṭadyumna proceeded towards Droṇa. Dhṛshṭadyumna + Sātyaki & Droṇa + Duryodhana (who grieved on account of his former friendship with Sātyaki); Duryodhana was worsted by Sātyaki; Karṇa rushed to the rescue of Duryodhana; Bhīma rushed towards Karṇa. Yudhishṭhira urged his warriors to rush to the rescue of Sātyaki, Bhīma, and the twins; Arjuna attacked the Kurus, and Droṇa attacked the Pāñcālas (VII, 189). Droṇa caused a great carnage among the Pāñcālas; the Pāñcālas and Sṛñjayas & Droṇa; the Pāṇḍavas feared, thinking that Arjuna would not fight with Droṇa. Kṛshṇa told Arjuna to abandon virtue and let some man tell Droṇa that Açvatthāman had been slain in battle. Arjuna did not approve of it; others approved of it, but Yudhishṭhira with great difficulty. Bhīma slew with a mace an elephant named Açvatthāman belonging to the Mālava chief Indravarman, and exclaimed before Droṇa: "Açvatthāman has been slain." Droṇa did not believe Bhīma, but attacked Dhṛshṭadyumna and slew the Pāñcālas (and Somakas) with the Brāhma weapon, and cut off the head of Vasudāna, and slew 500 Matsyas, etc. The Ṛ. Viçvāmitra, etc., etc. (ν), appeared in the welkin and reproved Droṇa for using the Brāhma weapon against persons not acquainted with it, and called upon Droṇa to lay aside his weapons and leave the earth soon. Droṇa asked Yudhishṭhira whether the report about Açvatthāman's death was true; Kṛshṇa urged Yudhishṭhira to save his army by an untruth; Bhīma urged him to do the same; Yudhishṭhira distinctly said that Açvatthāman was dead, adding indistinctly the word "elephant"; before this Yudhishṭhira's chariot had stayed at a height of four fingers' breadth from the surface of the earth; after this untruth his animals touched the earth. Droṇa became quite dejected, also after the words of the Ṛ., and beholding Dhṛshṭadyumna before him, could not fight as before (VII, 190). Dhṛshṭadyumna & Droṇa; the celestial weapons no longer appeared at Droṇa's bidding; his weapons, that had not been exhausted for four days and one night, now became exhausted on the third part of the fifth day. Droṇa took up another celestial bow which Aṅgiras had given him; a fierce encounter took place between Droṇa and Dhṛshṭadyumna; none else had arrows of that kind that Droṇa used in close fight except Kṛpa, etc. (ξ); Sātyaki rescued Dhṛshṭadyumna and was applauded by Kṛshṇa and Arjuna, and the Si., etc. (VII, 191). Duryodhana, Karṇa, and Kṛpa + Dhṛtarāshṭra's sons & Sātyaki + Yudhishṭhira, etc. (ο); Yudhishṭhira urged his troops against Droṇa (in order to aid Dhṛshṭadyumna), who again used the Brāhma weapon; Bhīma took up Dhṛshṭadyumna on his own chariot, and urged him to slay Droṇa quickly; both Dhṛshṭadyumna and Droṇa invoked the Brāhma weapon, etc.; Dhṛshṭadyumna began to slay the Vaçātis, etc. (π); Bhīma again reminded Droṇa of Açvatthāman's death, calling upon Karṇa, Kṛpa, and Duryodhana to exert carefully in battle. Droṇa laid his weapons aside, devoted himself to yoga, and proceeded to heaven (Brahmaloka) in the company of the foremost of Ṛ., in a blaze of light, that only Sañjaya, etc. (ρ), saw; Dhṛshṭadyumna cut off Droṇa's head—though forbidden by Arjuna and blamed by everybody—and threw it down amongst the Kurus, who ran away in all directions, except Açvatthāman. Sañjaya, through the grace of Vyāsa, beheld Droṇa's proceeding after he had ascended the sky. The Kurus, the Pāṇḍavas, and the Sṛñjayas all became dejected and ran away; Bhīmasena and Dhṛshṭadyumna embraced each other, Bhīmasena expecting the slaughter of Karṇa and Duryodhana (VII, 192).

He becomes enraged with everyone even at the slightest transgression; he that would give me shelter should not anger me." As no one took notice of him (read with B. °n nādriyate), I invited him. Sometimes he would eat food sufficient for many thousand persons, sometimes very little, and [sometimes] he would not return home; he would laugh and weep without any visible reason; no one at that time was equal to him in years; [one day] he burnt all the beds and coverlets and all the well-adorned damsels, and then went out; then he asked for rice-milk (pāyasa); having previously caused every kind of food and drink to be kept ready, I caused hot rice-milk to be brought; having eaten some, he ordered me to smear my limbs with the remnant, which I did; then he smeared Rukmiṇī, and causing her to be yoked to a chariot, he, ascending that chariot, set out of my house, striking her with the hook, and proceeded along the high road; the Dāçarhas became angry; as Rukmiṇī tottered, he struck her [with the whip]; then he leapt down from the chariot and fled towards the south on foot, followed by us. Then he became gratified because I had subdued my anger, and said: "As long as gods and men will continue to entertain a liking for food, so long will everyone among them cherish the same liking for thee; so long as there will be righteous [men] (puṇyāḥ) in the worlds, so long will thy fame last; agreeable thou shalt be to all persons; whatever articles of thine have been broken or burnt or destroyed, thou shalt see restored or even better; thou wilt have no fear of death through such parts of thy body as have been smeared [with the rice-milk]; thou ought to have smeared also the soles of thy feet." I saw my body endued with great beauty and splendour. He also blessed Rukmiṇī, saying: "Thou shalt be the foremost of women in fame, etc., free from decrepitude or diseases or loss of complexion, possessed of a fragrant odour, the foremost of Kṛshṇa's 60,000 wives, and [after death] thou shalt dwell in the same world as Kṛshṇa." Having recommended me to be always thus disposed towards the brahmans, he disappeared. I and Rukmiṇī took the vow of always satisfying the brahmans. Having entered our house, I saw that everything which D. had broken or burnt had become renewed. From that day forth I have always worshipped the brahmans: XIII, 160, 7416, 7449.—§ 773 (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 161, 7458 (°aḥ prasādāt).—§ 773*d* (Çiva): XIII, 161, 7494 (is a form of Çiva).—§ 789 (Putradarçanap.): XV, 30, 820 (repetition from § 131).—§ 793 (Mausalap.): XVI, 4, †123 (had made Kṛshṇa invulnerable except on the soles of the feet, cf. § 773*c*). [Duryodhana-yajña(ḥ)] ("the sacrifice of Duryodhana"). § 516 (Ghoshay., cf. Karṇadigv.): Karṇa proposed to Duryodhana that he should celebrate a rājasūya sacrifice like Yudhishṭhira. But as the purohita told him that so long as Yudhishṭhira and Dhṛtarāshṭra were living he could not undertake the rājasūya sacrifice, and advised him to cause the tributary kings to pay him tribute in gold, and with that gold to make a plough, and to plough the sacrificial compound with it, and then to perform a Vaishṇava sacrifice that nobody had performed before save the ancient Vishṇu (v. 15292, cf. v. 15329 foll.) which was equal to the rājasūya, this plan was agreed upon. Duryodhana appointed persons to their respective tasks, and desired all the artisans to construct the plough, etc. (III, 255). When Vidura had announced to Dhṛtarāshṭra that the preparations had been made, messengers were dispatched to invite the princes and the brahmans. Duḥçāsana ordered one messenger to invite the Pāṇḍavas, but Yudhishṭhira replied that they could not come before the completion of the thirteenth year. Bhīma threatened; the other Pāṇḍavas said nothing unpleasant. Vidura was charged with the distribution of food to the guests. After the completion of the sacrifice, all the kings having been dismissed, Duryodhana, with his brothers and Karṇa and Çakuni, entered Hāstinapura (III, 256). Duryodhana was praised by most of the citizens, and his friends compared him to Yayāti, Nahusha, Māndhātṛ, and Bharata, who had gone to heaven after celebrating this sacrifice (v. 15329 foll., cf. v. 15292). Karṇa said that when Duryodhana had slain the Pāṇḍavas in battle and completed the rājasūya sacrifice he would once more honour him thus, and promised that until he had slain Arjuna he would not allow his feet to be washed, nor taste meat, and he would observe the Asura vow (i.e. not to drink intoxicating liquors, Nīl.), and never refuse to give to whoever might solicit him.

Dvaitavana [2], name of a lake (in the Dvaitavana forest). § 322 (Dvaitavanapr.): III, 24, 928 (°ṃ nāma saraḥ), 930 (saraḥ), 931 (do.).—§ 324 (do.): III, 26, 965 (do.).—§ 449 (Ājagarap.): III, 177, 12359 (do., on Sarasvatī).—§ 512 (Ghoshayātrāp.): III, 237, 14784 (saraḥ); 239, 14844 (do.), 14848 (do.); 240, 14861 (do.), 14867 (do.), 14868 (do.), 14873 (do.).

Dvaitavanapraveça(ḥ) ("proceeding to the Dvaitavana forest") (cf. Arjunābhigamanap.). § 322: The Pāṇḍavas, with Kṛshṇa and Dhaumya, on costly chariots yoked with excellent steeds, went into the forest, distributing nishkas of gold, etc., to brahmans versed in Çikshā (i.e., vedic pronunciation, PCR., or "grammar and the other vedāṅgas," Nīl.), akshara (= vedic orthography, PCR.; = veda, Nīl.), and mantras (= praṇava, i.e. the syllable oṃ, Nīl.), and followed by twenty attendants with bows, etc., while Indrasena, with the princess's (i.e. Subhadrā's, Nīl.) clothes and ornaments and the nurses and maidservants, followed in a chariot. The citizens walked round Yudhishṭhira, and the brahmans and principal men of Kurujāṅgala of all castes saluted him and blamed the Dhārtarāshṭras, etc. Arjuna told them that after their exile they would take away the good name of their enemies, and asked them to beseech the ascetics for their good. At last they returned to their respective abodes (III, 23). After a conference between Yudhishṭhira and Arjuna, they resolved upon dwelling for these twelve years at the sacred lake Dvaitavana (see BR.) in the forest of the same name (copious description), on the banks of Bhogavatī (i.e. Sarasvati, Nīl.), surrounded by many brahmans, and saluted by hosts of Cāraṇas and Siddhas, who came to see Yudhishṭhira (III, 24).—§ 323: While they were dwelling there, Dhaumya performed their ishṭis (i.e. darça-paurṇamāsa, etc., Nīl.) and offerings to the Pitṛs, etc. Once the old ṛshi Mārkaṇḍeya came to them and smiled, recollecting Rāma Dāçarathi, whom he had seen on the top of the Ṛshyamūka, and comforted Yudhishṭhira by reminding him of the aforesaid Rāma, Nābhāga, Bhagīratha, etc., and Alarka, the king of the Kāçis and the Karūshas (b), the seven ṛshis, who had followed the ordinance of the Creator and therefore blazed in the firmament; "so you will regain prosperity." Then he went away in a northerly direction (III, 25).—§ 324: The Dvaitavana forest becoming filled with brahmans (Bhṛgus, Āṅgirasas, Vāsishṭhas, Kāçyapas, Agastyas, Ātreyas, etc.), and always resounding with Vedic recitations, mingling with the twangs of the bows of the Pāṇḍavas, a beautiful union of brahman and kshatriya customs was produced. Therefore one evening the ṛshi Baka Dālbhya represented to Yudhishṭhira that the kshatriya should always consult with a brahman, as did the Asura king Bali, the son of Virocana, who went to no other tīrtha than the brahmans, and then had all his wishes gratified, but who met with destruction when he began to act unjustly towards them. Then all those brahmans, Dvaipāyana, Nārada, Jāmadagnya, etc. (enumeration) (a), praised Yudhishṭhira (III, 26).

Dyūtaparvan ("the section relating to the gambling," the 28th of the minor parvans of the Mhbhr.). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 319. — § 293: When Vyāsa with his disciples came to take leave, Yudhishṭhira asked him about the celestial, atmospherical, and terrestrial portents which, according to the statement of Nārada, had happened at the rājasūya. Vyāsa said that in thirteen years they would be fulfilled by the destruction of all the kshatriyas, and that Yudhishṭhira would that very night see Çiva gazing incessantly towards the direction presided over by the king of the Pitṛs (i.e. the south). Then Vyāsa with his disciples proceeded towards Kailāsa. Yudhishṭhira resolved to die in order that he might not be the cause of the destruction of the kshatriyas, but called back from his intention by Phālguna (i.e. Arjuna), he took upon him the vow not to speak a harsh word to his brothers or to any of the kings. Then, having gratified the Pitṛs and gods, he entered his own palace, accompanied by his ministers (II, 46).—§ 294: Duryodhana, accompanied by Çakuni, by and by beheld all the sabhā; he mistook a piece of crystal for water and drew off his clothes, mistook a lake for land and fell in, etc., and was laughed at by Bhīma, Arjuna, the twins, and the menials of the palace. Filled with wrath and jealousy he became pale, and returned to Hāstinapura, together with Çakuni (II, 47). Çakuni told him to ask Yudhishṭhira, who was very fond of gambling and did not know how to play, to play at dice; then he (Çakuni), who was skilled in dice, would win his kingdom and prosperity for Duryodhana (II, 48). Çakuni told Dhṛtarāshṭra that Duryodhana was pale and depressed; Dhṛtarāshṭra asked Duryodhana the cause; Duryodhana told him that Yudhishṭhira supported 88,000 snātakas, giving to each of them thirty slave-girls; that 10,000 other brahmans daily ate at his palace the best food off golden plates; that the king of Kāmboja sent to him innumerable skins, etc.; that the Ocean brought the Vāruṇa nectar to him in a vessel of copper, as the celestial wives (amarastriyaḥ) to Indra; that Vāsudeva, having brought an excellent conch, bathed him with sea-water brought in 1,000 jars of gold, etc., from the eastern, southern, and western oceans; that the conches, which were blown when 100,000 brahmans were fed, could be heard there almost incessantly, etc. Duryodhana proposed to Dhṛtarāshṭra to invite Yudhishṭhira to a game at dice with Çakuni, and prevented him from consulting Vidura till he had had a sabhā built. Then he ordered Vidura, who dissuaded him in vain, to invite Yudhishṭhira. Vidura in great sorrow went to Bhīshma (II, 49).—At the request of Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana related that Dhṛtarāshṭra, having ascertained the opinion of Vidura (b), sought to bring Duryodhana back from his purpose to play at dice; but Duryodhana would not give way, relating that the Nīpas, Citrakas, the Kaukuras, the Kāraskaras, and the Lohajaṅghas were like bondsmen in the house of Yudhishṭhira, and that Bhīma, Arjuna, and Draupadī had laughed at his mistake regarding the crystal, etc. (II, 50).—§ 295: Duryodhana enumerated to Dhṛtarāshṭra the articles brought as tribute from various peoples to Yudhishṭhira. Yājñasenī (i.e. Kṛshṇā) daily (during the rājasūya) took care that everybody, including the deformed and the dwarfs, had eaten before she herself took her meal. Only two peoples did not pay tribute to Yudhishṭhira, the Pāñcālas, in consequence of their relationship by marriage, and the Andhaka-Vṛshṇis, in consequence of their friendship (II, 52).—§ 296: Duryodhana continued to enumerate kings, etc., who waited upon Yudhishṭhira at the rājasūya. The Ocean brought that Vāruṇa conch (çaikyaṃ, "in a sling," PCR., i.e. in a strap, cf. BR.), which Viçvakarman had constructed with 1,000 nishkas, and which Prajāpati had in a former kalpa presented to Indra; with that conch Kṛshṇa anointed (abhishiktaḥ) Yudhishṭhira. When the conches were blown, those among the kings who were weak fell down, and Dhṛshṭadyumna, Sātyaki, the Pāṇḍavas, and Keçava laughed; then Bībhatsu (= Arjuna) gave to the principal brahmans 500 bullocks with horns plated with gold, and Yudhishṭhira obtained, like Hariçcandra, such prosperity that he surpassed Rantideva, Nābhāga, Yauvanāçva, Manu, Pṛthu Vainya, Bhagīratha, Yayāti, and Nahusha (II, 53).—§ 297: Continuation of the conversation between Dhṛtarāshṭra and Duryodhana (II, 54, 55). —§ 298: As Çakuni recommended the match of dice and praised his own dexterity in gambling, and Duryodhana spoke reprovingly of Vidura on account of his fondness for the Pāṇḍavas, etc., Dhṛtarāshṭra reluctantly caused the sabhā (called Toraṇasphāṭikā) to be built, with 1,000 columns adorned with gold and lapis lazuli, a kroça in length and breadth, and then ordered Vidura to bring Yudhishṭhira and his brothers (II, 56, 57). Vidura arrived at the palace of Yudhishthira and invited him. Yudhishṭhira, having learned that he should have to play with Çakuni, Viviṃçati, Citrasena, Satyavrata, Purumitra, and Jaya, "the most desperate and terrible gamblers, always depending upon deceit," was unwilling to come; but as he had made the vow never to refuse when challenged, he set out for Hāstinapura the next day with his relatives, Draupadī, brahmans, etc., riding on the chariot taken charge of (so BR.) by Bāhlīka, and when he had arrived he saluted Bhīshma, Droṇa, Karṇa, Kṛpa, Açvatthāman, Somadatta, Duryodhana, Çalya, Saubala, Duḥçāsana, Jayadratha, etc., and Gāndhārī and Dhṛtarāshṭra (II, 58). Çakuni exhorted Yudhishṭhira to gamble. Yudhishṭhira quoted Asita Devala (b), but he was obliged to assent; Duryodhana said that he himself would supply jewels, etc., and that it was for him that Çakuni would play (II, 59). The play began, the stake being a wreath of pearls, which Çakuni won (II, 60). Çakuni then won from Yudhishṭhira his treasury, slave-girls, serving-men, elephants, chariots, the Gandharva horses which Citrasena had given to Arjuna, his warriors, and nidhis (II, 61). Vidura, addressing Dhṛtarāshṭra, quoted the words of Kāvya, and reminded him that among the Bhojas they had abandoned an unworthy (asamañjasaṃ) son; the Andhakas, Yādavas, and Bhojas had abandoned Kaṃsa, and when he had been slain by Kṛshṇa the whole tribe became glad for a hundred years; "[likewise] let Arjuna slay this Suyodhana at thy command"; he quoted what Kāvya said to the Asuras in order to induce them to abandon Jambha, and related how a king from greediness after gold killed some gold-vomiting fowls that dwelt in his house, and so destroyed both his present and future wealth (II, 62). Vidura warned against the gambling, and suggested to Dhṛtarāshṭra rather to win the Pāṇḍavas than their wealth, and to let Çakuni, the hill-king (Pārvatīyaḥ), return whence he came (II, 63). Duryodhana blamed Vidura for his partiality towards the Pāṇḍavas, and said that he would only follow the advice of his own intellect.

Vidura complained of the ingratitude of kings and their fondness of flattery (II, 64). Yudhishṭhira lost his wealth, kine, horses, goats, and sheep, "from Parṇāçā to the eastern bank of the Sindhu," his city, country, lands, and the wealth of all dwelling therein, except that of the brahmans, and all those persons themselves except the brahmans, the ear-rings and nishkas and other ornaments of the princes who were present, then Nakula, Sahadeva, Arjuna, Bhīma, himself, and Draupadī; now Bhīshma, Droṇa, Kṛpa, Vidura, etc., all gave way to grief, but Dhṛtarāshṭra, Karṇa, Duḥçāsana, etc., were glad (II, 65).—§ 299: Duryodhana ordered Kshattṛ (i.e. Vidura) to bring hither Draupadī to sweep the chambers and stay with the servant maids; Vidura declared that having lost himself, Yudhishṭhira could not lawfully stake Draupadī, and said: "A goat had once swallowed a knife, and when it was pierced by it the hunter placed the head of the animal on the ground, and when drawing the knife out he tore its throat frightfully; therefore do not swallow the wealth of the Pāṇḍavas" (II, 66). Then Duryodhana ordered the prātikāmin (a sūta) to bring Draupadī; she ordered him to ask Yudhishṭhira whether he had lost himself or her first; as Yudhishṭhira said nothing, Duryodhana ordered that Draupadī should come and put her question in the assembly; she sent the sūta back to the assembly saying that she would do what aged and virtuous persons would tell her; all sat without uttering a word; but Yudhishṭhira sent a trusted messenger to Draupadī, directing that, although in consequence of her season having come she was attired in one piece of cloth only, she should come before her father-in-law weeping bitterly. Duryodhana again ordered the prātikāmin to bring her, and as he seemed irresolute, he asked Duḥçāsana to do so. As she would flee to the ladies' household, Duḥçāsana dragged her in by her hair, while she was praying to Kṛshṇa and Jishṇu (i.e. Arjuna), who were Nārāyaṇa and Nara, and blaming Droṇa, Bhīshma, Vidura, etc., for looking silently on this crime. As she was casting a glance upon her enraged lords, Duḥçāsana, dragging her still more forcibly, addressed her, "Slave! slave!" and laughed aloud, applauded by Karṇa, Çakuni, and Duryodhana, while all the others were filled with sorrow. Bhīshma declared himself to be unable to decide the question she had put. As she then asked the others present to decide it, Duḥçāsana spoke many harsh words, and Bhīma, looking at Yudhishṭhira, gave way to wrath (II, 67). Bhīma blamed Yudhishṭhira, and ordered Sahadeva to bring fire, as he wanted to burn the hands of Yudhishṭhira, but Arjuna appeased him. Vikarṇa repeatedly appealed to those present to decide the question, and as they did not say one word, he declared that as Yudhishṭhira must be regarded as of no authority, because he had shown himself addicted to the vice of gambling, etc., he regarded Draupadī as not won. All applauded him, except Karṇa, who maintained that she had been justly won, and as, contrary to the ordinance of the gods that a woman should have only one husband, she had five husbands, there was no impropriety in dragging her to the assembly, and even to uncover her. Karṇa then asked Duḥçāsana to take off the robes of the Pāṇḍavas and the attire of Draupadī. The Pāṇḍavas took off their upper garments, and Duḥçāsana began to drag off the attire of Draupadī. But as she thought of and cried to Hari (i.e. Kṛshṇa), Dharma continually covered her anew with excellent clothes. Bhīma swore that he would drink the blood of Duḥçāsana. All blamed Duḥçāsana and Dhṛtarāshṭra. Vidura exhorted the assembly to answer the question put by Draupadī, and related the dialogue of Prahlāda (q.v.) and Āṅgirasa (i.e. Sudhanvan) (§ 300).—§ 300: v. Prahlāda.—§ 301: The kings answered not a word, and Karṇa told Duḥçāsana to take away the slave-woman Kṛshṇā to the inner apartments (II, 68). Dragged by Duḥçāsana, Draupadī saluted the assembly, complained of being exposed to the gaze of the crowd, and again asked them to answer her question. Bhīshma again declared himself unable to decide it, but thought Yudhishṭhira ought to decide it (II, 69). Duryodhana said to Draupadī: "Let thy husbands decide the question, and, by making Yudhishṭhira the just a liar, free thee from slavery." Bhīma said that only his obedience to Yudhishṭhira and the admonitions of Arjuna retained him from killing the wretched sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra. Bhīshma, Droṇa, and Vidura asked him to forbear (II, 70). Karṇa exhorted Draupadī to choose a new husband among the sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra, and Duryodhana, after having exhorted Yudhishṭhira to decide the question, uncovered his left thigh and showed it to Draupadī. Bhīshma swore that he would break this thigh of his. Vidura warned them, and was of opinion that Yudhishṭhira had no right to stake her. Duryodhana said that if Bhīma, Arjuna, and the twins declared that Yudhishṭhira was not their master, then Draupadī should be free. Arjuna said that he was certainly their master before the play, "but having lost himself, let all the Kauravas judge whose master he could be after that." Just then a jackal began to cry near the agnihotra of Dhṛtarāshṭra, and other terrible omens were heard. On that account Gāndhārī and Vidura remonstrated with Dhṛtarāshṭra, who blamed Duryodhana and granted a boon to Kṛshṇā. She chose that Yudhishṭhira should become free from slavery. As she was granted a second boon, she asked that Bhīma and his brothers with their chariots and bows should regain their liberty. She refused to ask a third boon (II, 71). Karṇa praised Draupadī for having saved her husbands. Bhīma threatened to slay all his foes instantly, but was retained by Arjuna and Yudhishṭhira (II, 72). Dhṛtarāshṭra sent Yudhishṭhira with his brothers and Kṛshṇā upon their chariots to Indraprastha, having asked him not to remember the harshness of Duryodhana (II, 73).

Gadāyuddha ("the combat with the mace"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 346 (i.e. Gadāyuddhaparvan).

[Gadāyuddhaparvan (°va)] ("the section relating to the battle with maces"). Cf. Gadāparvan, Gadāyuddha. § 613: Requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra (α), Sañjaya related: Duryodhana agreed to fight his foes, one at a time (β); Yudhishṭhira granted his request, adding that if he could slay even one of the five Pāṇḍavas he would remain king. Duryodhana rose from the lake and challenged the Pāṇḍavas (γ); Yudhishṭhira taunted him with his unfair conduct in slaying Abhimanyu (δ) (IX, 32). Kṛshṇa reproved Yudhishṭhira for his rashness in staking everything on the result of such a single combat with Duryodhana (ε); Bhīmasena assured Kṛshṇa that Duryodhana would be no match for him in an encounter with the mace (ζ); Kṛshṇa applauded Bhīma, and exhorted him to slay Duryodhana (η); Sātyaki, etc. (θ), applauded Bhīma; Bhīma's boastful address (ι) to Yudhishṭhira and Duryodhana; Duryodhana's dignified reply, applauded by the Pāṇḍavas and Sṛñjayas; the elephants began to grunt and the steeds to neigh; the weapons of the Pāṇḍavas blazed forth of their own accord (IX, 33).—§ 614: When the battle between Bhīma and Duryodhana was about to commence, Bala-Rāma (b), having heard that that battle between his two disciples was about to begin, came and was worshipped by the Pāṇḍavas, Kṛshṇa, etc. (α); he said that forty-two days had passed since he departed, having set out under the constellation Pushya and come back under the constellation Çravaṇa; he was clad in blue robes and of fair complexion. Then that dreadful encounter took place (IX, 34).—§ 615: Requested by Janamejaya (α), Vaiçampāyana related how Bala-Rāma had determined upon and set out (under the constellation Maitra) on a pilgrimage to the tīrthas on the Sarasvatī (β), having let the sacred fire be brought from Dvārakā and the priests, and having given away rich donations to everyone who wished for them, accompanied by priests, friends, brahmans, chariots, elephants, steeds, and servants, visiting all the sacred places along her course. In the course of his wanderings he at last came to Kurukshetra. Requested by Janamejaya (γ), Vaiçampāyana related the Baladevatīrthayātrā (q.v.) (IX, 35–54). Requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra, Sañjaya related: Beholding Bala-Rāma, Duryodhana rejoiced. According to the proposal of Bala-Rāma, Yudhishṭhira with his brothers and Duryodhana proceeded westwards to Samantapañcaka on the southern side of the Sarasvatī. D. and Cā. praised Duryodhana. Description of Bhīma and Duryodhana (δ). Duryodhana told Yudhishṭhira (who was standing among his brothers and Kṛshṇa and Rāma) to behold the battle, protected by the Kaikeyas, etc. (π). That large assembly of kings sat down, as did also Bala-Rāma, who was worshipped by all around him. Bhīma and Duryodhana stood inciting each other with violent speeches (IX, 55). The dispute between the two heroes (ρ). At last Duryodhana said, "What is the use of bragging? fight with me," and was applauded by the Somakas, etc. The elephants grunted aloud and the steeds neighed repeatedly; the weapons of the Pāṇḍavas blazed forth of their own accord (IX, 56). Description of the combat; D., G., and men wondered; the Pāṇḍavas and the Somakas feared; adopting the manœuvre called Kauçika, Duryodhana baffled Bhīma's mace; as Duryodhana once fell down to the earth, the Sṛñjayas cried aloud, so also did the Pāṇḍavas; Bhīmasena then had his coat of mail fractured and was prostrated on the ground, but rose, steadying himself with great effort (IX, 57). Arjuna inquired of Kṛshṇa about the relative merits of the two combatants; Kṛshṇa said that their training had been equal, but Bhīma was superior in strength; Duryodhana was superior in skill and had had more practice; by fighting fairly Bhīma would never succeed in winning, but by fighting unfairly he would surely be able to slay Duryodhana, just as the Asuras were vanquished by the gods, Virocana and Vṛtra by Indra with the aid of deception; "Bhīma has vowed to break the thighs of Duryodhana with his mace; let him accomplish that vow of his"; he censured Yudhishṭhira for his folly, and quoted a verse uttered by Uçanas; "Duryodhana has practised with the mace for full thirteen years." Arjuna struck his own left thigh before the eyes of Bhīmasena, who understood the sign. As Duryodhana set his heart on the manœuvre called dvasthāna and jumped upwards, Bhīmasena hurled his mace at the thighs of Duryodhana and fractured them. Portents appeared; showers of blood and showers of dust were poured by Indra; a loud noise was made by Y., Rā., and Pç. (description of the portents); the Pāñcālas and the Pāṇḍavas were filled with anxiety; D., G., Si., and Cā. went away (IX, 58). The Pāṇḍavas and Somakas rejoiced; Bhīmasena rebuked Duryodhana, and touched his head with his left foot, which was censured by Yudhishṭhira, who grieved for Duryodhana (σ) (IX, 59); Baladeva's wrath was excited upon seeing Duryodhana struck below the navel; he rushed on to slay Bhīma, but was seized and pacified by Kṛshṇa (τ). Baladeva praised Duryodhana and cursed Bhīmasena, and then ascended his chariot and proceeded towards Dvārakā. The Pāñcālas, etc. (υ), became dejected; Kṛshṇa and Yudhishṭhira, Bhīmasena, etc., and Duryodhana spoke about what had passed (IX, 60) (Kṛshṇa asking the Pāṇḍava warriors to forbear insulting Duryodhana; Duryodhana's angry reply to Kṛshṇa, charging him with every unfair act in course of the battle; Kṛshṇa reminded Duryodhana of his own evil acts, and referred to his miserable end as the inevitable consequence of those acts; Duryodhana's boast with reference to his end, which he pronounced to be most glorious) (φ). Celestial showers descended on Duryodhana's head; G., Aps., and Si. praised him. The Pāṇḍavas and Kṛshṇa became ashamed; but Kṛshṇa justified the use of unfair means for the slaughter of the Kuru warriors (χ) (IX, 61). The Pāṇḍava warriors proceeded to the Kuru camp, which was entirely deserted (ψ); Kṛshṇa caused Arjuna to take down the Gāṇḍīva and his inexhaustible quivers, and then to dismount; then Kṛshṇa also dismounted; the celestial ape disappeared, and the chariot (burnt by Droṇa and Karṇa with the Brāhma weapon), with its steeds, etc., was reduced to ashes. Kṛshṇa congratulated Yudhishṭhira on his victory, and Yudhishṭhira attributed that victory to Kṛshṇa's power (ω). In the encampment of the Kurus they found great wealth; at Kṛshṇa's suggestion the Pāṇḍavas and Sātyaki resolved to pass the night at a spot outside the camp, on the banks of the Oghavatī. They then dispatched Kṛshṇa to Hāstinapura in order to pacify the wrath of Gāndhārī, and to comfort her and Dhṛtarāshṭra. He set out with Dāruka upon his chariot, yoked with Çaibya and Sugrīva (IX, 62). Asked by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana said that the reason why Yudhishṭhira sent Kṛshṇa to Hāstinapura was his fear that Gāndhārī, by means of her ascetic merit, should reduce the Pāṇḍavas to ashes, because Duryodhana had been slain unfairly (αα); "Vyāsa will be there." Kṛshṇa caused Dāruka to equip his chariot, and quickly set out for Hāstinapura. He arrived at Dhṛtarāshṭra's palace, where Vyāsa had arrived before him; he comforted Dhṛtarāshṭra (ββ) and Gāndhārī (γγ), who said that her heart had again become steady (δδ). Then Kṛshṇa came to know the evil that was meditated by Açvatthāman, and suddenly took leave, requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra and Gāndhārī to protect the Pāṇḍavas, and proceeded with Dāruka. Vyāsa comforted Dhṛtarāshṭra. Kṛshṇa arrived at the camp and informed the Pāṇḍavas (IX, 63). Requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra, Sañjaya narrated the lamentations of Duryodhana while lying on the field with his thighs broken (εε); he thought himself happy, and asked Sañjaya to bring his message to his parents and to Açvatthāman, etc. (ζζ) ("you should never place any confidence in the Pāṇḍavas"), and took leave of the messagebearers (εε); he was confident that Cārvāka, the mendicant devotee, would avenge his death. Thousands of men, with eyes full of tears, fled away; the earth trembled, etc. The messengers went and informed Açvatthāman and then went away (IX, 64). Açvatthāman, etc. (ζζ), came to Duryodhana, who lay surrounded by carnivorous animals, etc. Açvatthāman's lament and Duryodhana's reply (ηη); Açvatthāman vowed to slay all the Pāñcālas; Duryodhana let Kṛpa install Açvatthāman as the Kuru generalissimo; then they took leave of Duryodhana and left him alone (IX, 65).

Gādheyī ("the daughter of Gādhi") = Satyavatī: XIII, 242.

[Gālavacarita(ṃ)] ("the history of Gālava"; cf. Gālavasya caritaṃ). § 565 (Bhagavady.): In ancient times, in order to try Viçvāmitra, who was then engaged in ascetic austerities, Dharma in the form of the Ṛshi Vasishṭha, and feigning himself hungry, came to his hermitage. Viçvāmitra cooked caru, but could not approach Dharma before his guest had dined with the other hermits. Dharma said, "I have already dined; wait here," and went away. Viçvāmitra, bearing that food on his head and himself subsisting on air, waited a hundred years, while the ascetic Gālava waited on him. Then Dharma accepted that food, which was still warm and fresh, and called Viçvāmitra a viprarshi, whereby he became a brahman. Gālava repeatedly asked Viçvāmitra to take a gift from him as his preceptor, and at last Viçvāmitra, seeing his persistency, requested him to give 800 white steeds each with one black ear (V, 106). Gālava got troubled and was gradually reduced to a skeleton. He thought of repairing to Vishṇu (or Kṛshṇa), when his friend Garuḍa came, and said he had spoken to Vishṇu in his behalf, and that he would bear him (V, 107). Garuḍa described the East: here Savitṛ first rises, and the tapas of the Sādhyas is performed at eve; . . . the two eyes of Dharma; . . . here the daughters of Daksha in primeval times gave birth to their children, and here the sons of Kaçyapa first multiplied; here Çakra was first anointed as king of the gods; here is the tapas of Indra and the gods, all their religious ceremonies; here the Creator (bhagavān Lokabhāvanaḥ) first sang the Vedas; here Sāvitrī was first said by Savitṛ to the reciters of the Vedas (brahmavādishu), and here the Yajurveda (yajūṃshi) was given by Sūrya; here the Soma juice was first drunk by the gods, etc.; it was here that Varuṇa, repairing to Pātāla, obtained prosperity (çriyaṃ); here the birth, growth, and death of the ancient Vasishṭha took place; here first grew the hundred branches (sṛtayaḥ) of oṃ; here the Munis called dhūmapāḥ first imbibed the smoke of the havis; here the thousand-rayed Sun slays, rising, the wicked and ungrateful men and Asuras; here is the gate of the three worlds and the path to heaven and to felicity (V, 108). Garuḍa mentioned the remarkable subjects in the South (dakshiṇā diç, so called because Vivasvat gave it away as a dakshiṇā): Pitṛpakshas trailokasya; Ūshmapāḥ devāḥ; the Viçvedevas with the Pitṛs, with whom they equally share the sacrifices in all the worlds; the second door of Dharma . . .; the Devarshis, Pitṛlokarshis, and Rājarshis, who dwell here in great happiness . . .; it is the region whither all must repair; . . . there are Nairṛtāḥ to be seen by the sinful; the Gandharvas chanting on Mandara and in the abodes of the viprarshis; Raivata who, hearing the Sāmans, retired to the woods, leaving wife and friends and kingdom; Sāvarṇi and Yāvakrīta setting a limit to Sūrya (the southern tropical circle, PCR.); Rāvaṇa soliciting immortality from the gods; Vṛtra incurring the enmity of Çakra; Vaitaraṇī filled with the bodies of persons condemned to hell . . .; reaching this region the sun drops sweet water (i.e. the beginning of the rainy season, Nīl.), and thence, proceeding again to the Vāsishtha direction (Vāsishṭhīṃ kāshṭhāṃ = the quarter of the seven Ṛshis, i.e. the North, Nīl), once more drops dew (himaṃ); there is Garuḍa obtaining for food an enormous elephant and tortoise; the great Ṛshi Cakradhanus' birth from Sūrya took place here (he was afterwards known as Kapila who burned Sagara's sons); the perfect (siddhāḥ) brahmans, named Çivāḥ, who fully had mastered the Vedas, here obtained liberation (moksha); here is Bhogavatī, ruled by Vāsuki, Takshaka, and Airāvata. Those that have to journey hither encounter here a thick gloom, so that it cannot be penetrated by either the Sun or by Agni; "even thou shalt have to pass this road" (V, 109). Garuḍa mentioned the remarkable subjects and occurrences of the West: Varuṇa's origin; his instalment by Kaçyapa; the Moon, quaffing all the six juices of Varuṇa, becomes young again in the beginning of the bright fortnight; the Daityas being routed and bound fast by Vāyu; the mountain Asta; Night and Sleep; Çakra beholding the goddess (devīṃ) Diti asleep, and cutting off her fœtus, whence sprang the Maruts; the roots of Himavat stretching towards the eternal Mandara (sunk in the Ocean, Nīl.), the end of which is not to be reached by journeying for even 1,000 years; Surabhi milking on the shores of the lake with golden lotuses; in the midst of the Ocean the headless trunk of Svarbhānu; the chanting of the Vedas by Suvarṇaçiras (invisible, and whose hair is eternally yellow); Dhvajavatī, the daughter of the muni Harimedhas, remaining in the air in consequence of Sūrya's injunction, 'stay'; . . . the sources of the rivers; here, in the abode of Varuṇa, are the waters of the three worlds; the abode of Ananta, and of Vishṇu, and of Pavana (the friend of Agni), and of the Maharshi Kaçyapa Mārīca (V, 110). The North (uttara) has its name from saving (uttāraṇa) from sin; it is also called madhyama, i.e. between the East and the West. None can live there that is unamiable, etc. Garuḍa mentioned its remarkable subjects and places: Badarī, the asylum of Nārāyaṇa, Kṛshṇa, Jishṇu, and Brahmán; Maheçvara with the effulgence of the Yugānta fire; Purusha dwelling with Prakṛti, invisible to munis, D. with I., G., Y., and Si., except Nara and Nārāyaṇa; there Vishṇu appears alone, having 1,000 heads and 1,000 legs; there Candramas (the Moon) was installed in the sovereignty over the brahmans; Mahādeva receiving Gaṅgā on his head; Devī practising austerities for obtaining Maheçvara; Kāma; the wrath (of Çiva, PCR.); here took place Kubera's instalment, on the breast of Kailāsa, in the sovereignty of Rā., Y., and G.; Caitraratha; here is the asylum of the Vaikhānasas; Mandākinī; Mandara; Saugandhikavana, guarded by Nairṛtas; the plantain forest (kadalī-skandhaṃ), etc.; the Siddhas; the seven Ṛshis with Arundhatī; Svāti; Brahmán near Yajña . . . the munis named Dhāmā (? so B.) (whose origin, etc., are not known) guarding Gāyantikādvāra (B. Gaṅgāmahādvāraṃ); the man who passes beyond them will certainly meet with destruction, except Nārāyaṇa and Nara or Jishṇu; here is Kailāsa, the abode of Ailavila; the origin of the ten Apsarases Vidyutprabhāḥ; Vishṇupada, made by Vishṇu, when he, in his covering the worlds with three steps, stepped on the northern region; here took place king Marutta's sacrifice at Uçīrabīja, by the side of the golden lake; here was Himavat's gold-mine, that exhibited itself to the viprarshi Jīmūta, who gave away the whole wealth to the brahmans, and had it called after his name (Jaimūta); here morning and evening the Lokapālas

(diçāṃ pālāḥ) proclaim "what business of what person shall we do?"; it is called uttara (North) because it is superior (uttara) to all (V, 111). At the request of Gālava, Garuḍa carried him (description) to the East, and laughed at his foolish thoughts of casting away his life. At the mountain Ṛshabha they rested for some time (V, 112). On the peak of the Ṛshabha they met with a brahman lady, Çāṇḍilī, engaged in penances; she gave them cooked food; they fell asleep. As Garuḍa awoke, his wings had fallen off. It was because he had, out of pity, thought of carrying the lady to the place where Mahādeva, Vishṇu, etc. (a), live together. She gave him his wings back, having warned him not to contemn women, and they set out, but failed to find the steeds. Viçvāmitra met them, and said the time had already passed, but promised to wait for some time more (V, 113). Garuḍa explained the etymology of hiraṇya (gold) and dhana (wealth), and why gold is not easily obtainable (see the note of PCR. from Nīl.); it is guarded by the Ajaikapād-Ahirbradhnāḥ and by Dhanada (i.e. Kubera). They went to Garuḍa's friend, the Rājarshi Yayāti Nāhusha (of the Lunar race), in Pratishṭhāna, and told him the matter, and that Gālava, when he had paid off his debt, would devote himself to severe ascetic penances and give Yayāti a portion of his wealth of asceticism; "as many hairs as there are in a horse's body, so many regions of bliss are attained by him that gives away a horse" (V, 114). Yayāti, the performer of 1000 sacrifices, the liberal ruler of all the Kāçis, in view of the fact that they had come to him, passing over all the kings of the Solar race, not having the steeds, gave to Gālava his daughter Mādhavī, always solicited by gods, men, and Asuras. Garuḍa went away to his own abode, and Gālava offered Mādhavī to king Haryaçva of Ikshvāku's race at Ayodhyā, who was desirous of offspring (V, 115), on the condition that he gave as her dower the 800 steeds of the kind wanted. Haryaçva had but 200 steeds of this kind; he therefore got the maiden—who by a brahman had been granted the boon that after each delivery she would be a maiden again—in order to beget only one son upon her, for his 200 steeds. This son was Vasumanas. Then Gālava offered her to king Divodāsa (V, 116), the Kāçi king, son of Bhīmasena. The same arrangement was made as with Haryaçva. She bore him Pratardana (V, 117). Then Gālava came to king Uçīnara in the city of the Bhojas, with whom the same arrangement was made. To him she bore Çibi. Then Gālava took the maiden and went to see Garuḍa (V, 118). Garuḍa said that the remaining 200 steeds were unobtainable. For in days of yore Ṛcīka sought at Kānyakubja Gādhi's daughter Satyavatī in marriage, and was requested by Gādhi to give 1000 steeds of this kind. Ṛcīka obtained them at Açvatīrtha, and gave them to the king. Performing the sacrifice Puṇḍarīka, the king gave them away to the brahmans. The three kings had each purchased 200 of them from the brahmans, but the remaining 400, while being transported over the Vitastā, were taken by the river (so B.). Viçvāmitra, instead of obtaining the 200 steeds wanting, begot Ashṭaka upon Mādhavī, and gave him the steeds; Ashṭaka then went to a certain city (puraṃ prāyāt tadā Somapuraprabhaṃ) and Kauçika (i.e. Viçvāmitra) to the woods. Gālava dismissed Garuḍa, and returning the maiden to her father, he went into the woods (V, 119). Yayāti went to a hermitage on the confluence of the Gangā and Yamunā, taking Mādhavī, Pūru, and Yadu with him, desirous of again disposing of his daughter in a svayaṃvara. There was assembled a vast concourse of N., Y., G., men, etc., and numerous Ṛshis resembling Brahmán himself. Mādhavī selected the forest as her lord, practised tapas, and adopted a deer's mode of life (mṛgacāriṇī). King Yayāti died after having lived for many thousands of years. The progeny of Pūru and Yadu multiplied greatly. Yayāti, resembling a maharshi, enjoyed the highest bliss in heaven for many thousands of years. On one occasion, while seated among the Rājarshis and Maharshis, king Yayāti mentally disregarded all the gods and Ṛshis and men. Indra at once read his heart; the dwellers of heaven did not longer know him, and he was soon divested of his splendour (V, 120). For continuation v. Yayāti (§ 566).

[Gandhamādana-praveça(ḥ)] ("proceeding to the Gandhamādana"). § 419 (cf. Tīrthayātrāp.): Yudhishṭhira in vain proposed that Bhīma should return with Kṛshṇā, Sahadeva, Dhaumya, the charioteers, cooks, etc., to Gaṅgādvāra, while Yudhishṭhira should proceed with Nakula and Lomaça. Bhīma promised to carry Kṛshṇā and the twins. Kṛshṇā said that she would be able to go. They entrusted to the Pulinda king (v. 10866, Kulindānāṃ) Subāhu on the Himavat (inhabited by Kirātas, Taṅgaṇas, and Pulindas), the servants Indrasena, etc., the cooks and stewards, and Draupadī's accoutrements, and began to proceed (III, 140).—§ 420: Yudhishṭhira complained to Bhīma that he had not seen Arjuna for five years. When the tempest was over and the sun reappeared, they continued their journey (III, 143). When they had proceeded only a kroça, Draupadī sank down. Nakula ran forward and supported her, and the others hastily came, and Yudhishṭhira took her on his lap and lamented. Dhaumya and the other brahmans comforted and blessed him, and by reciting mantras capable of dispelling Rākshasas, and by performing ceremonies, while she was touched and fanned by the Pāṇḍavas, they made her regain her senses. The twins pressed her feet with their hands. Bhīma promised Yudhishṭhira to carry them all over the snowy mountains, "or Ghaṭotkaca will carry us all." With Yudhishṭhira's permission Bhīma thought of Ghaṭotkaca, who immediately came and was embraced by Bhīma (III, 144). Ghaṭotkaca carried Kṛshṇā through the air, and hundreds of other Rākshasas carried the Pāṇḍavas and the brahmans, while Lomaça moved along the path of the Siddhas. So they proceeded through regions inhabited by Mlecchas, Vidyādharas, monkeys, Kinnaras, Kimpurushas, Gandharvas, etc., and the northern Kurus, towards Kailāsa and Badarī (c), where they were received by the numerous ṛshis, and where they dwelt, beholding Maināka, Hiraṇyaçikkara, Bindusaras, and Bhāgīrathī, and offering oblations, etc. (III, 145).

Gāndhārīputra = Duryodhana, q.v.

[Gāndhārīputrotpatti(ḥ)] ("birth of Gāndhārī's sons"). § 180 (Sambhavap.): One day Dvaipāyana, gratified with Gāndhārī's hospitality, granted her the boon that she should have 100 sons (cf. § 174). She had borne the burden in her womb for two years, when she heard that Kuntī had brought forth a son; she then struck her womb violently, and there came out a hard mass of flesh like an iron ball. When she was about to throw it away, Vyāsa appeared and caused her to put the ball of flesh, sprinkled with cool water and divided into 101 parts (each of the size of a thumb), into 101 pots filled with clarified butter, which were placed in a concealed spot. After having said that she should open the covers of the pots after two years, Vyāsa retired to Himavat in order to devote himself to asceticism. Duryodhana was younger than Yudhishṭhira, being born on the same day as Bhīma. As soon as Duryodhana was born he began to cry like an ass, and ill-portending omens appeared. Vidura, etc., in vain told Dhṛtarāshṭra to abandon him. Within a month the 100 sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra and one daughter were born. During the pregnancy of Gāndhārī, Dhṛtarāshṭra begot the Karaṇa Yuyutsu upon a maidservant of the Vaiçya class (I, 115).

Gaṅgātoyārdramūrdhaja = Çiva (1000 names[1]).

[Gaṅgāvataraṇa(ṃ)] ("descent of the Gaṅgā"). § 389 (Sagara): Asked by Sagara to bring back the horse and deliver him from hell (Narakād), Aṃçumat went to the spot where the earth had been excavated, entered the sea by that very way, and beheld Kapila and the horse. As he bowed his head before Kapila, etc., Kapila granted him the horse, and that his fathers should be purified and go to heaven, when his son's son, by the favour of Çiva, brought Tripathagā (i.e. Gaṅgā) from heaven. When he had brought the horse back to the sacrificial yard and narrated all the events to Sagara, Sagara grieved no more, but praised Aṃçumat and finished the sacrificial rites. Sagara was greeted by all the gods and converted the sea into a son of himself (putratve kalpayām āsa), and after a long reign placed his grandson on the throne and ascended to heaven. Aṃçumat ruled the whole earth like Sagara, and died after he had placed his son Dilīpa on the throne. Dilīpa in vain tried to effect the descent of Gaṅgā in order to raise his forefathers. He then anointed his son Bhagīratha as king, and practised austerities in the forest, and then ascended to heaven (III, 107). Bhagīratha made over his kingly duties to his minister (sacive), and (b) practised austerities on the Himavat during 1000 celestial years, living upon fruits, roots, and water. Then Gaṅgā Haimavatī appeared in a material form (mūrtimatī), and promised to besprinkle the bodies of his forefathers and carry them to heaven, and as there existed none in the three worlds except Çiva, who was able to sustain her fall, she caused Bhagīratha to go to Kailāsa, where he, by his austerities, obtained the favour of Çiva (III, 108), who, surrounded by his awful attendants (pārishadaiḥ), came to Himavat. There he caused Bhagīratha to pray to Gaṅgā. Gaṅgā immediately came down from the sky, in the presence of the gods, maharshis, Gandharvas, snakes, and Yakshas, and Çiva received her on his forehead, whence she fell to the earth, divided into three streams. At her request Bhagīratha led her to the spot where the bodies of Sagara's sons lay, while Çiva went to Kailāsa with the celestials. Gaṅgā filled the sea, and Bhagīratha adopted her as his daughter and offered libations of water to his forefathers (III, 109).

Gaṅgā-Yamunayos tirtham, a tīrtha. § 733*p* (Ānuçāsanik): By bathing in G. and at the mountain Kalañjara and offering to the Pitṛs, one obtains the merit of ten horse-sacrifices; by bathing in Shashṭihrada one obtains great merit on the day of full moon in the month of Māgha; thirty millions and ten thousands of tīrthas come together in Prayāga, and by bathing there during the month of Māgha one attains to heaven: XIII, 25, 1721.

Garuḍa, the son of Kaçyapa and Vinatā, the vehicle of Vishnu (Kṛshṇa), or the emblem of his flagstaff. § 11 (Anukram.): I, 2, 365.—§ 27 (Kaçyapa): I, 16, 1092 (son of Kaçyapa and Vinatā).—§ 32*b* (Kadrū): In the meantime G. came out bursting the egg and ascended the skies. The gods thought that it was Agni, but were undeceived): I, 23, 1239, 1245, 1248.—§ 33 (Āstīkap.): Then the gods and the ṛshis praised G. and prevailed upon him to diminish his own energy and splendour: I, 23, †1255.—§ 34 (do.): Bearing his brother Aruṇa on his back G. went from his father's home and arrived at his mother's side on the other shore of the ocean and placed Aruṇa in the east: I, 24, 1262.—§ 36*b* (Kadrū): G. carried the snakes on his back, but ascended too near to the Sun so that the snakes became scorched by the rays of the Sun: I, 25, 1283.—§ 40 (Āstīkap.): The serpents promised that if G. brought them the amṛta he and his mother should be freed from bondage (I, 27). Having been directed by Vinatā to live upon the Nishādas (b) but not to injure the brahmans, and being taught by her how to know who is a brahman, he set out, and, having come to the Nishādas, he raised a great quantity of dust, and opened his mouth; there the Nishādas entered by thousands, being blinded by the dust, and were devoured (I, 28). A brahman who, with his wife of the Nishāda caste, entered the throat of G., and began to burn him, was recognized and relieved with his wife by G. (I, 29): I, 28, 1320, (1327); 29, (1343), 1344.—§ 41 (do.): As G.'s hunger was not appeased Kaçyapa told him of the elephant Supratīka (b) and the tortoise Vibhāvasu: I, 29, (1348).—§ 42 (do.): Then Kaçyapa blessed G.: I, 29, 1371.—§ 43 (do.): G. then seized the elephant and the tortoise and came to the tīrtha Alamba (? Nīl. and BR., "without reposing") (b). A banyan-tree invited him to sit on one of its huge branches, but the branch broke (I, 29). G. caught the branch with his beak, and perceiving Vālakhilyas suspended therefrom with their head downwards he continued to fly with the branch, the elephant, and the tortoise, fearing to kill the Vālakhilyas if he should throw away the branch. The Vālakhilyas therefore gave him the name Garuḍa (etymology: guruṃ bhāraṃ samāsādyoḍḍīnaḥ, v. 1390). On Gandhamādana he saw Kaçyapa engaged in ascetic devotions. Kaçyapa propitiated the Vālakhilyas (c) for him, then they abandoned the bough and went to Himavat to practise ascetic penances. According to the advice of Kaçyapa G. flew away for a hundred thousand of yojanas to a mountain without human beings, there he threw down the bough and ate the tortoise and the elephant. Then he again rose on his wings: I, 29, 1375; 30, 1384, 1390, 1400, 1407, 1413.—§ 44 (do.): Omens foreboding fear began to appear among the gods. Bṛhaspati declared that it was owing to the fault of Indra and the ascetic penances of the Vālakhilyas (cf. § 45) that G. now approached to take away the soma. Indra then caused the gods to surround and watch the amṛta (I, 30).—§ 45 (Vālakhilya, pl.): I, 31, 1436, 1469, 1470 (by the penances of the Vālakhilyas G. had been born as the lord of winged creatures (patatrīṇām indraḥ, v. 1455)).—§ 46 (Āstīkap.): G. attacked the gods, whom he blinded with dust, and Bhaumana lay as dead on the field. Indra caused Vāyu to dispel the dust. The Sādhyas and the Gandharvas fled eastwards, the Vasus and the Rudras towards the south, the Ādityas towards the west, and the Açvins towards the north. G. then slew nine Yakshas, Açvakranda, etc. (a), who guarded the amṛta. The amṛta on all sides was surrounded with fire. G. then divided his mouth into 8100 mouths, and taking water from many rivers he extinguished the fire. Then he assumed a diminutive body (I, 32), and passed through the spokes of the revolving keen-edged wheel of steel placed before the soma. Then there were two great snakes, who would reduce to ashes everyone who might be seen by them. G. covered their eyes with dust, and unseen by them mangled them to pieces. He then flew away with the amṛta, not drinking it himself. He met with Vishṇu on his way and they agreed that G. should stay above Vishṇu, sitting on the flagstaff of his chariot and be his vehicle, and be immortal and free from disease without drinking amṛta. While G. was flying Indra hurled his thunderbolt at him. G. did not feel the slightest pain, but in honour of Dadhīca and Indra and the thunderbolt G. dropped a feather, and from its beauty he gained the name Suparṇa (I, 33). Indra and G. made friendship with each other, and agreed that G. should not give the soma to anyone for drink. Indra should bring it away after it had been put down by G., and G. should feed on the snakes. The snakes declared Vinatā to be free; G. placed down the soma on some kuça grass, and while the snakes were performing their ablutions, their daily devotions, and other religious rites, Indra took up the amṛta and returned to heaven. When the snakes licked the kuça grass their tongues were divided in twain, and the kuça grass, from the contact with the amṛta, became sacred from this time (I, 34): I, 32, 1471 (pakshirāṭ), 1477, 1485, 1494; 33, 1509, 1513; 34 (1520), (1528), 1534, 1543. — § 99 (Aṃçāvat.): I, 65, 2548 (among the Vainateyas). — § 120 bis (do.): I, 66, 2603 (Vainateyaḥ, reckoned among the Ādityas).—§ 129 (do.): I, 66, 2635 (°āruṇau, sons of Vinatā).—§ 191 (Arjuna): I, 123, 4830 (present at the birth of Arjuna).—§ 244 (Rājyalābhap.): I, 207, 7575 (dvipaksha - G°prakhyair dvāraiḥ). — § 289 (Arghāharaṇap.): II, 38, 1395 (patatāṃ mukhaṃ).—[§ 277 (Jarāsandhavadhap.): II, 24, 945, 946 (Garutmān, took his seat on the flagstaff of Kṛshṇa)].—§ 512 (Ghoshayātrāp.): III, 241, 14897 (rathair G°niḥsvanaiḥ).—§ 549 (Pāṇḍavapr.): IV, 2, 51 (patatām iva, sc. varaḥ).—§ 561 (Yānasandhip.): V, 71, 2578 (Kṛshṇa identified with Arishṭanemi, Garuḍa, Suparṇa).—§ 564 (Mātaliyop.): V, 101, 3600 (°ātmajāḥ, enumeration of his descendants); 105, 3674, (3676), 3704, 3705 (G. who wished to devour the serpent Sumukha was humiliated by Vishṇu, who then threw Sumukha upon the

of Ghaṭotkaca; Açvatthāman & Ghaṭotkaca + the latter's son Añjanaparvan, who was slain by Açvatthāman; Ghaṭotkaca created illusions; Açvatthāman invoked the Vajra weapon and then the Vāyavya weapon; the followers of Ghaṭotkaca were Paulastyas and Yātudhānas. Duryodhana was afraid of them, but quieted by Açvatthāman he urged Çakuni to proceed against Arjuna with Karṇa, etc. (κ), and a great force; and he should also slay Bhīma, etc. (λ). Çakuni proceeded quickly. Ghaṭotkaca & Açvatthāman, who burnt a full akshauhiṇī of Rā. troops and destroyed the chariot of Ghaṭotkaca, who mounted Dhṛshṭadyumna's chariot. Bhīmasena + Ghaṭotkaca + Dhṛshṭadyumna, etc. (μ), & Açvatthāman, who destroyed the Rā. host and caused a river of blood, and slew Drupada's son Suratha, and then Suratha's younger brother Çatruñjaya, etc. (ν); Ghaṭotkaca was made insensible by Açvatthāman and borne away by Dhṛshṭadyumna; Yudhishṭhira's chariots turned away. Si., G., Pç., N., birds, P., etc., Aps., and the gods applauded Açvatthāman (VII, 156). Beholding the sons of Drupada and Kuntibhoja and Rā. in thousands slain by Açvatthāman, Yudhishṭhira, etc. (ξ), set their hearts firmly on battle. Somadatta & Yuyudhāna + Bhīma, who made Somadatta insensible, and slew Pratīpa's son Bāhlīka (the father of Somadatta), ten sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra; Nāgadatta, etc. (ο), & Bhīma, who slew them. Vṛkaratha (the brother of Karṇa) & Bhīma, who slew him, and thereupon seven brothers of Çakuni, and pressed Çatacandra down into the earth. Çakuni's five brothers, Gavākṣha, etc. (π) & Bhīma, who slew them. Yudhishṭhira & Droṇa; Yudhishṭhira began to slay the Ambashṭhas (ρ); Droṇa and Yudhishṭhira employed the Vāyavya weapon; then Droṇa employed the Vāruṇa, Yāmya, Āgneya, Tvāshṭra, and Sāvitra, which were all baffled by Yudhishṭhira; then Droṇa invoked the Aindra and the Prājāpatya weapons, and Yudhishṭhira the Māhendra; then both employed the Brāhma weapon. Droṇa (with the Vāyavya weapon, abandoning Yudhishṭhira) & Drupada's division, who fled, but were rallied by Arjuna and Bhīma, who attacked Droṇa from two sides, and were followed by the Kaikayas, etc. (σ). The Kurus fled; Droṇa and Duryodhana in vain tried to rally them (VII, 157). Duryodhana urged Karṇa to defeat the Pāṇḍavas (Pāñcālas, etc. (τ)); Karṇa vowed to slay Arjuna, etc. (υ), and was ridiculed by Kṛpa (φ), who said that Dhṛshṭadyumna, etc. (χ), were all fighting for the Pāṇḍavas; Karṇa vowed to cut off Kṛpa's tongue if Kṛpa addressed him again in the same strain, naming Duryodhana, etc. (ψ), as invincible, and saying that Bhīshma, etc. (ω), had been slain by the work of destiny (VII, 158). Açvatthāman in rage rebuked Karṇa (αα); Duryodhana and Kṛpa pacified Karṇa and Açvatthāman. Karṇa & the Pāṇḍavas + Pāñcālas, who were vanquished and slaughtered. Urged by Duryodhana, Açvatthāman, etc. (ββ), & Arjuna in order to rescue Karṇa; Arjuna slew the steeds and driver of Karṇa and made him loose his bow; Karṇa took shelter in Kṛpa's chariot. Duryodhana (rallying the troops) & Arjuna; Kṛpa urged Açvatthāman to proceed against Arjuna. Açvatthāman made Duryodhana desist from an encounter with Arjuna; Duryodhana urged Açvatthāman to slay the Pāñcālas and the Somakas (VII, 159). Açvatthāman said that he, etc. (γγ), could destroy the foe within the twinkling of an eye, and promised to fight with the Pāñcālas, etc. (δδ). Açvatthāman routed the Pāñcālas, etc. Dhṛshṭadyumna & Açvatthāman; Si. and Cā., etc., applauded them; Açvatthāman cut off the bow, the standard, the drivers, and the steeds of Dhṛshṭadyumna; the Pāñcālas and Sṛñjayas fled away (VII, 160). Yudhishṭhira and Bhīma & Açvatthāman + Duryodhana; Yudhishṭhira slew the Ambashṭhas, etc. (δδ), Bhīma the Abhīshāhas, etc. (εε), Arjuna the Yaudheyas, etc. (ζζ). Droṇa employed the Vāyavya weapon; the Pāñcālas fled, but were rallied by Bhīma and Arjuna, who attacked Droṇa from both sides together with the Sṛñjayas, etc.; the Kauravas fled; Duryodhana and Droṇa endeavoured in vain to rally them (VII, 161). Sātyaki (with white steeds of the Sindhu breed) + Bhīmasena & Somadatta (Bāhlīka's son), who was slain by Sātyaki. Yudhishṭhira + Pāṇḍavas + Prabhadrakas & Droṇa; Droṇa and Yudhishṭhira employed the Vāyavya weapon. Kṛshṇa dissuaded Yudhishṭhira from fighting with Droṇa; he should go to Duryodhana, Arjuna, and Bhīma (VII, 162). Droṇa, etc. (ηη), afflicted one another and the troops; both armies were dejected. The remnants of the slaughtered army were once more disposed in array; Droṇa in the van, Çalya in the rear, Açvatthāman and Çakuni on the right and left flanks; Duryodhana protected all the troops. Duryodhana ordered his troops to take up lighted lamps and torches. D., Ṛ., G., D.-ṛ., V.-D., Aps., N., Y., U., and K. also took up lamps, and many lamps came from Nārada and Parvata for Duryodhana's sake. (Description); the glare reached the skies, and awakened by it, D., G., Y., Ṛ., etc., and Aps. came there (VII, 163). Duryodhana appointed his brothers Vikarṇa, etc. (θθ), to protect Droṇa from the rear; Kṛtavarman should protect his right wheel, and Çala his left. The remnants of the Trigartas he placed in the van; especially Droṇa should be protected against Dhṛshṭadyumna; "Karṇa will vanquish Arjuna, Bhīmasena, and others." Arjuna & the Kauravas; Açvatthāman & the Pāñcāla ruler; Droṇa & the Sṛñjayas (VII, 164). Yudhishṭhira commanded all his warriors to proceed against Droṇa alone. The Pāñcālas & the Somakas & Droṇa; Kṛtavarman & Yudhishṭhira (advancing against Droṇa); Yuyudhāna & Bhūri; Karṇa & Sahadeva (advancing in order to get at Droṇa); Duryodhana & Bhīmasena; Çakuni & Nakula; Kṛpa & Çikhaṇḍin; Duḥçāsana & Prativindhya; Açvatthāman & Ghaṭotkaca; Vṛshasena & Drupada (advancing against Droṇa); Çalya & Virāṭa (advancing in order to slay Droṇa); Citrasena & Nakula's son Çatānīka (advancing in order to slay Droṇa); Alambusha & Arjuna; Dhṛshṭadyumna & Droṇa, etc.; Yudhishṭhira retreated, and Kṛtavarman once more began to protect the wheel of Droṇa's chariot (VII, 165). Bhūri & Sātyaki who slew him. Açvatthāman & Sātyaki; Ghaṭotkaca & Açvatthāman, who swooned away, but then made Ghaṭotkaca insensible, who was borne away by his charioteer. Bhīma crushed the steeds, the charioteer, and the chariot of Duryodhana, who ascended Nandaka's chariot, and was regarded as slain, also by Yudhishṭhira, who rushed to Bhīma. The Pāñcālas, etc. (ι), & Droṇa (VII, 166). Karṇa & Sahadeva, who was worsted by Karṇa, who touched him with his bow and scoffed at him (κκ), but did not slay him, recollecting the words of Kuntī; Sahadeva ascended the chariot of the Pāñcāla prince Janamejaya. Virāṭa & Çalya, who deprived him of his chariot and then slew Virāṭa's brother Çatānīka; once more Virāṭa (ascending Çatānīka's chariot) & Çalya, who made him insensible; Virāṭa was carried away by his charioteer; the host fled away. Alambusha (with terrible-looking Piçācas of equine faces yoked to his chariot; description) & Arjuna (+ Kṛshṇa), who vanquished him; Alambusha fled away. Arjuna quickly proceeded towards Droṇa, slaughtering men, etc.; they all fled (VII, 167). Citrasena (Dhārtarāshṭra) & Nakula's son Çatānīka, who vanquished him; Citrasena ascended Kṛtavarman's chariot; Vṛshasena & Drupada, who swooned and was carried off by his charioteer; Vṛshasena caused a great slaughter among the Pāñcālas and the Somakas, and then proceeded to Yudhishṭhira. Duḥçāsana (Dhārtarāshṭra) & Prativindhya, who was vanquished by him and rescued by his brothers, ascended the chariot of Sutasoma and continued to fight Duḥçāsana, to whose assistance many warriors rushed, and a fierce battle ensued (VII, 168). Nakula & Çakuni, who was carried away by his charioteer; Nakula proceeded towards Droṇa. Çikhaṇḍin (proceeding towards Droṇa) & Kṛpa; (Çikhaṇḍin was carried away by his charioteer); the Pāñcālas and Somakas surrounded him, and Dhṛtarāshṭra's sons surrounded Droṇa. A battle commenced once more (description) (VII, 169). Dhṛshṭadyumna (+ the Pāñcālas and Pāṇḍavas) & Droṇa; D., G., and Dā. wished prosperity to Droṇa; Karṇa, etc. (λλ) (in order to rescue Droṇa) & Dhṛshṭadyumna; Dhṛshṭadyumna & Drumasena, whom he slew; the six chariot warriors & Dhṛshṭadyumna; Sātyaki (in order to rescue Dhṛshṭadyumna) & Karṇa; the sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra + Karṇa + Karṇa's son Vṛshasena & Dhṛshṭadyumna + Sātyaki; Gāṇḍīva was heard, and the sound of Arjuna's chariot. Karṇa counselled Duryodhana to encompass and slay Dhṛshṭadyumna and Sātyaki; Duryodhana dispatched Çakuni with a large force (also Duḥçāsana, etc. (μμ)) against Arjuna, to slay Arjuna, etc. (νν); a great fight commenced. Çakāuni, etc., & Sātyaki; Droṇa & Dhṛshṭadyumna + the Pāñcālas (VII, 170). Sātyaki was surrounded by many leaders of the Kuru army; Duryodhana & Yuyudhāna, who forced him to fly away (having mounted the chariot of Kṛtavarman), and routed the foes with whom he was engaged. Arjuna & Çakuni (+ his son Ulūka), whom he deprived of his chariot; Çakuni ascended the chariot of Ulūka; Arjuna slew the Kuru army. Kṛshṇa and Arjuna blew their conches. Dhṛshṭadyumna & Droṇa, whom Dhṛshṭadyumna checked and caused an immense carnage. Dhṛshṭadyumna, etc. (ξξ), blew their conches (VII, 171). Duryodhana in anger addressed Droṇa and Karṇa (οο), who furiously attacked and routed the Pāṇḍava army; Droṇa, etc. (ππ); the Pāṇḍava host fled, throwing down their torches before the eyes of Bhīmasena, etc. (ρρ), pursued by Droṇa and Karṇa; Arjuna and Kṛshṇa rallied the retreating troops (σσ); a wild battle ensued between the Kurus (especially Droṇa and Karṇa) and the Pāṇḍavas (especially Yudhishṭhira) (description) (VII, 172). Karṇa & Dhṛshṭadyumna, who was deprived of his chariot by him, but then slew his steeds and ascended the chariot of Arjuna and desired to proceed, but was stopped by Yudhishṭhira. Karṇa routed the Pāñcālas, who, with the Somakas, attacked Karṇa. Meanwhile Karṇa's charioteer had yoked other white steeds of the Sindhu breed to his chariot. The Pāñcāla host (and the Sṛñjayas) fled (description); others, only observed by Droṇa, fled away on all sides. Yudhishṭhira and Arjuna (and Kṛshṇa) conversed about Karṇa; Arjuna asked Kṛshṇa to proceed towards Karṇa. Kṛshṇa said that none except Arjuna and Ghaṭotkaca could encounter him; but Arjuna must not do it, as long as he had the lance given him by Indra; "but Ghaṭotkaca (who had celestial weapons, as also those used by Rā. and As.), would vanquish Karṇa." They prevailed upon Ghaṭotkaca to encounter Karṇa (ττ); "thou, O Ghaṭotkaca, Sātyaki, and Bhīmasena are the foremost among all our warriors; Sātyaki will protect thy rear." Ghaṭotkaca & Karṇa (VII, 173). Duryodhana urged Duḥçāsana to protect Karṇa against Ghaṭotkaca. Meanwhile the Rā. Jaṭāsura's son Alambusha said to Duryodhana that he wished to slay the Pāṇḍavas in order to avenge his father, whom they had slain, performing some Rā.-slaying incantations. Duryodhana urged him to slay Ghaṭotkaca. Alambusha & Ghaṭotkaca; both resorted to their power of illusion (νν); Ghaṭotkaca slew Alambusha and threw his head upon Duryodhana's chariot, promising that he should also see the slaughter of Karṇa and then his own. Ghaṭotkaca & Karṇa (VII, 174). Requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra, Sañjaya described Ghaṭotkaca's person, armour, weapons, and chariot; then the encounter between Karṇa & Ghaṭotkaca, who employed Rā.-illusion, and even destroyed the celestial weapon of Karṇa; a Vāyavya weapon was employed by Karṇa to destroy clouds; Ghaṭotkaca was once seen on a chariot, created by illusion, yoked with a number of asses, looking like elephants, and having the faces of Piçācas; Ghaṭotkaca employed an açani of Rudra's workmanship, furnished with eight wheels; there appeared many Rā., Pç., and Yātudhānas, etc. (VII, 175). Meanwhile, the Rā. Alāyudha, with many thousands of Rā., came to Duryodhana, and said that he wished to avenge his kinsmen Baka and Kirmīra, and his friend Hiḍimba, and the marriage of Hiḍimbā, by slaying all the sons of Kuntī, especially Bhīma, with Kṛshṇa, Ghaṭotkaca, etc. Duryodhana urged him to slay Bhīma. Alāyudha's chariot, steeds, weapons, etc., were pretty much as those of Ghaṭotkaca's (description) (VII, 176). The Kurus with Duryodhana welcomed Alāyudha, having been (with Droṇa, etc. (φφ)), very anxious about Karṇa, who was engaged with Ghaṭotkaca. Alāyudha & Ghaṭotkaca (abandoning Karṇa); Karṇa & Bhīmasena; Bhīma (disregarding the advancing Karṇa) & Alāyudha (abandoning Ghaṭotkaca) + all the other Rā. (who fled away); the Rā. attacked the elephants, the Pāñcālas, and the Sṛñjayas. Kṛshṇa urged Arjuna to proceed in Bhīma's wake, and to let Dhṛshṭadyumna, etc. (χχ), proceed against Karṇa, Nakula, etc. (ψψ), slay the other Rā.; Arjuna himself should resist Droṇa's division; then Kṛshṇa dispatched Ghaṭotkaca to protect Bhīmasena (VII, 177). Ghaṭotkaca (abandoning Karṇa) & Alāyudha (brother of Baka). Meanwhile, Yuyudhāna, etc. (ωω), & the Rā. of Alāyudha; Arjuna shot many kshatriyas, Karṇa many Pāñcālas headed by Dhṛshṭadyumna, Çikhaṇḍin, etc. Bhīma + Nakula, etc. (ααα) (having slain the Rā.) & Karṇa; the Pāñcālas & Droṇa; Alāyudha resorted to his power of illusion, and so did Ghaṭotkaca, who cut off the head of Alāyudha and threw it down before Duryodhana, who, with all his troops, became full of anxiety, while the Pāñcālas and Pāṇḍavas roared like lions (VII, 178). Karṇa & the Pāñcālas, etc. (βββ); many of them entered the force of Yudhishṭhira. Ghaṭotkaca & Karṇa, who had his steeds and charioteer slain by Ghaṭotkaca, who then disappeared from view, and created a terrible illusion (description), which severely afflicted the Kuru host, which at last fled; Karṇa alone kept his ground, looked at by all the Saindhavas and Bāhlikas; Karṇa's steeds were again slain by Ghaṭotkaca, and his celestial weapon was baffled by Ghaṭotkaca's illusion. The Kauravas urged him to slay Ghaṭotkaca with the dart presented to him by Indra, without minding Bhīma, etc. (γγγ). When Karṇa held the dart in his hands Ghaṭotkaca began to fly away in fear, all creatures in the skies uttered loud cries, etc.; Karṇa hurled the dart, and Ghaṭotkaca was slain, and falling upon the Kaurava army with his gigantic body, he slew a full akshauhiṇī, desirous of benefiting the Pāṇḍavas. The Kauravas uttered loud shouts of joy; Karṇa ascended the chariot of Duryodhana and entered the Kuru host (VII, 179). The Pāṇḍavas were filled with grief; only Kṛshṇa with transports of delight raised his warcry, embracing Arjuna, to whom he explained that he rejoiced because Karṇa's dart could not now kill Arjuna, having been employed against Ghaṭotkaca; he recited to Arjuna how he had gradually caused all the foes of the Pāṇḍavas to be slain (VII, 180), which he explained more explicitly (δδδ) (VII, 181). Requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra why Karṇa had not hurled the fatal dart at Arjuna, Sañjaya assigned Kṛshṇa's policy as the reason (єєє), though it had formed the subject of deliberation with Duryodhana, etc. (ζζζ), every night. Sātyaki asked Kṛshṇa why Karṇa had not hurled his dart at Arjuna; Kṛshṇa said that Duḥçāsana, etc., had frequently discussed this subject, and Karṇa had approved of it; but Kṛshṇa always used to stupefy him; Kṛshṇa had neither sleep nor joy in his heart, as long as he could not frustrate that instrument for killing Arjuna (VII, 182). Concluding from Karṇa's not using the dart (єєє, ζζζ), Dhṛtarāshṭra attributed the ill success of the Kurus to Destiny, their own folly, and the policy of Kṛshṇa, and asked Sañjaya about the battle (ηηη). Sañjaya related: All the Kauravas uttered loud shouts and began to slay the Pāṇḍava troops. Yudhishṭhira told Bhīmasena to resist the Dhārtarāshṭra host, himself sitting down with tearful face; Kṛshṇa comforted him, but Yudhishṭhira remembered the many services Ghaṭotkaca had rendered them (θθθ); Droṇa and Açvatthāman were the real cause of Abhimanyu's slaughter, but it was Jayadratha who was slain; "Droṇa and Karṇa are the root of our woes"; therefore Yudhishṭhira will slay Karṇa, Bhīmasena being engaged with Droṇa's division. Yudhishṭhira quickly proceeded against Karṇa, followed by the Pāñcālas, etc. (ιιι). Vyāsa approached Yudhishṭhira and congratulated him upon Karṇa's having employed his dart against Ghaṭotkaca; "on the 5th day from hence the earth will be thine." Then he disappeared (VII, 183).

[Ghoshayātrāparvan] ("the expedition to the cattle station"), the 43rd of the minor parvans of Mhbhr. (cf. Ghoshayātrā). § 512: When the Pāṇḍavas had arrived at the lake (of Dvaitavana, Nīl.), and were dwelling in the woods visited by veda-knowing ascetics, there came to them a brahman, who afterwards went away to Dhṛtarāshṭra and told him how the Pāṇḍavas had become emaciated and reduced by wind and sun. Dhṛtarāshṭra was much afflicted, considering that Yudhishṭhira, who had formerly used to sleep on beds of ruṅku skins and to be wakened by sūtas and māgadhas, now slept on the bare ground; he lamented the treatment he had permitted to be meted out to the Pāṇḍavas, and feared lest they would avenge themselves; Arjuna, he thought, would not have left heaven, where he received the celestial weapons, if it were not for this purpose. This Çakuni told to Duryodhana, who was sitting with Karṇa, and Duryodhana was filled with grief (III, 236). Çakuni and Karṇa proposed to Duryodhana that they should go to Dvaitavana to exult over the Pāṇḍavas (III, 237). Duryodhana gladly approved the proposal, but feared that he might not obtain the permission of Dhṛtarāshṭra, who thought that the Pāṇḍavas had become more powerful than before in consequence of their ascetic austerities. He asked them, with Duḥçāsana, to find out some skilful pretext. The next morning Karṇa and Çakuni agreed with Duryodhana that they should go there under the pretext of supervising their cattle stations (III, 238). They then all saw Dhṛtarāshṭra. A cowherd, named Samaṅga, who had been instructed beforehand, came to the king and spoke to him of the cattle. Karṇa and Çakuni asked him to give permission to Duryodhana to go thither. Dhṛtarāshṭra suggested to send some faithful men, fearing some collision with the Pāṇḍavas if they were to go thither themselves; for though Yudhishṭhira would not suffer his wrath to be awakened, Bhīma and Draupadī were naturally passionate. Çakuni promised that they would not go to the spot where the Pāṇḍavas resided, and obtained the permission. Duryodhana then started with Karṇa, Duḥçāsana, Çakuni, etc., and ladies by the thousand, followed by the citizens and their wives, with 8,000 chariots, etc., and took up his quarters at the distance of a gavyūti from the lake of Dvaitavana (III, 239). Having caused the calves to be marked, etc., Duryodhana, etc., began to sport and go a-hunting, and came to the lake. Yudhishṭhira was then, together with Draupadī, celebrating the diurnal rājarshi sacrifice according to the ceremonial used in the forest. When the attendants of Duryodhana came to the banks of the lake to construct pleasure-houses, they were forbidden to enter by a number of Gandharvas, who told them that the king of the Gandharvas had come from the abode of Kubera, with his followers and several hosts of Apsarases, etc., and when Duryodhana sent a number of his warriors, they also were prevailed upon by the Gandharvas to return (III, 240). A battle ensued between the soldiers of Duryodhana and the Gandharvas, headed by their king Citrasena; the soldiers of Duryodhana fled, except Karṇa, who killed hundreds of Gandharvas. Duryodhana, Çakuni, Duḥçāsana, and Vikarṇa returned to assist Karṇa, and the battle was renewed. Citrasena made use of illusion; it seemed as if every warrior of the Kuru army were surrounded by ten Gandharvas. The entire army of Duryodhana again fled, except Karṇa. The Gandharvas then destroyed the chariot of Karṇa, who, mounting the chariot of Vikarṇa, was forced to drive away (III, 241). Duryodhana refused to fly, but the Gandharvas destroyed his chariot and slew his charioteer and horses; thereupon Citrasena took him prisoner, and Duḥçāsana, who was seated on his chariot, and Citrasena, Viviṃçati, Vinda, and Anuvinda, and the royal ladies, were taken by other Gandharvas, [and Durvishaha, Durmukha, and Durjaya, v. 14924]. The flying soldiers and ministers of Duryodhana took refuge with Yudhishṭhira (III, 242). Yudhishṭhira, saying that the honour of the family was being destroyed by the Gandharvas' seizing Duryodhana, etc., in their presence, prevailed upon his brother to rescue Duryodhana, etc. (v. 14947: "the liberation of a foe from distress is equal to the bestowal of a boon, sovereignty, and the birth of a son, all the three put together"), if possible, by conciliation or lightly skirmishing, otherwise by all means, Yudhishṭhira being prohibited from partaking in the combat by his sacrifice. Arjuna promised to rescue Duryodhana or kill the king of the Gandharvas (III, 243). The four Pāṇḍavas, cased in mail and riding in chariots drawn by fleet horses, encountered the Gandharvas; as these would not set Duryodhana, etc., free, as requested by Arjuna, a fierce battle ensued (III, 244). The Gandharvas, in vain, attempted to break the chariots of the Pāṇḍavas; especially Arjuna, by means of his Āgneya weapon, sent millions of them to the abode of Yama. The Gandharvas then rose up to the skies, taking the Dhārtarāshṭras with them, and showering maces, darts, etc., upon Arjuna, who killed them with his weapons Sthūlākarṇa (B. Sthūṇākarṇa), Indrajāla, Saura, Āgneya, and Saumya. At last Citrasena rushed at Arjuna, armed with a mace of iron; as Arjuna cut that mace in seven pieces with his arrows, Citrasena, by means of his science, concealed himself from the view of Arjuna, and thus continued to fight with him; but Arjuna destroyed his power of concealing himself by shooting at him with his celestial arms guided by the sound (çabdavedham samāçritya). Then Citrasena showed himself to Arjuna, reminding him of his being his friend, and there was put an end to the battle (III, 245). Citrasena related to Arjuna that, staying in his abode, he had become acquainted with the purpose of Duryodhana, etc., and had been requested by Indra to bring Duryodhana thither in chains together with his counsellors. Arjuna entreated him to set Duryodhana free, but, at the request of Citrasena, they left it to be decided by Yudhishṭhira; Yudhishṭhira then liberated all the Kauravas. The Gandharvas went away with the Apsarases, and Indra revived the slain Gandharvas by sprinkling amṛta upon them. Friendly admonished by Yudhishṭhira, Duryodhana, overwhelmed with shame, returned to his capital (III, 246). When Duryodhana, afflicted with grief, was approaching Hāstinapura with his army, Karṇa congratulated him on the honourable victory over the Gandharvas (III, 247). Duryodhana told Karṇa that, as the Gandharvas had resorted to illusion and ascended the skies, he had been captured with his army, and that it was the Pāṇḍavas who had vanquished the Gandharvas (III, 248). Duryodhana continued his narrative and declared that he would stay there abstaining from food, and that the others, headed by Duḥçāsana, should go to Hāstinapura. He then offered the royal power to Duḥçāsana. Duḥçāsana, his voice choked in tears, refused to accept it. Karṇa reproached them for weeping thus, and declared that the Pāṇḍavas, who resided in the dominions of Duryodhana and enjoyed happiness under his protection, only did their duty in liberating him (III, 249). Karṇa continued explaining his opinion, that those who resided in the king's realm should always exert themselves to the best of their ability for the king; if the Pāṇḍavas had not followed Duryodhana to the battle it would have been an improper act on their part. Duryodhana, firmly resolved to leave the world, desired not to rise from where he sat (III, 250). Çakuni reproached Duryodhana for his foolish despair, saying that he ought rather to reward the Pāṇḍavas by granting them their paternal kingdom. Duryodhana embraced Duḥçāsana, but did not waver from his purpose; he spread kuça grass on the earth, etc., and began to pray and worship mentally.—§ 513: The Daiteyas and Dānavas who had formerly been vanquished by the gods and were dwelling in Pātāla, having ascertained Duryodhana's purpose, commenced a sacrifice with formulas, revealed by Bṛhaspati and Uçanas, according to the rites indicated in the Atharvaveda and the Upanishad, assisted by brahmans of rigid vows, well versed in the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas. After these rites were ended a sorceress (kṛtyā) arose, whom the Daityas caused to bring Duryodhana to them in the night (III, 251). The Dānavas said to him: "Do not do such a rash act as the vow of starvation. The suicide ever sinks into hell (adho yāti), and is blamed . . . In days of old we had obtained thee by ascetic austerities from Maheçvara; the upper part of thy body is wholly made of vajras, and is, therefore, invulnerable to weapons of every description; the lower part of thy body was made of flowers by Devī herself . . . Brave kshatriyas, headed by Bhagadatta, will slay thy foes . . . In order to aid thee many Dānavas (v. 15172: Daityas and Rakshases) have been born on earth. Other Asuras will also possess Bhīshma, Droṇa, Kṛpa, and others; possessed by those Asuras these heroes will abandon their kindness and fight with thy foes . . . We have already settled the means of slaying Arjuna; the slain Naraka has assumed the form of Karṇa; recollecting his former hostility he will encounter both Keçava (i.e. Kṛshṇa) and Arjuna, and vanquish Arjuna in battle. Indra in disguise will deprive Karṇa of his earrings and coat of mail. We also have appointed innumerable Daityas and Rākshasas, the so-called Saṃçaptakas, who will slay Arjuna . . . Thou art ever our refuge, as the Pāṇḍavas are the refuge of the gods." Then the Dānavas embraced and cheered him, and that very goddess (kṛtyā) carried him back to the spot where he had sat down intent upon putting an end to his life, and there she vanished. Now Duryodhana considered all as a dream, and thought he should defeat the Pāṇḍavas in battle. And also Karṇa, being possessed by the soul of Naraka, and the Saṃçaptakas, possessed by the Rākshasas, were desirous of slaying Arjuna; and Bhīshma, Droṇa, Kṛpa, etc., influenced by the Dānavas, were not so affectionate towards the Pāṇḍavas as they had been. Duryodhana did not tell anyone of this.—§ 514: When the night had passed away Karṇa again exhorted Duryodhana, and promised to slay Arjuna in battle. Duryodhana arose and arranged his army, and went to Hāstinapura, accompanied by Karṇa, Çakuni, his brothers headed by Duḥçāsana and Bhūriçravas, and Somadatta, and Bāhlika (III, 252).—§ 515: Karṇadigvijaya (q.v.).—§ 516: Duryodhanayajña (q.v.).—§ 517: Hearing the vow of Karṇa, Yudhishṭhira, filled with anxiety, made up his mind to abandon Dvaitavana. Duryodhana with his brothers, and Bhīshma, Droṇa, Kṛpa, and Karṇa ruled the earth justly and worshipped the brahmans by sacrifices and profuse gifts (III, 257).

Goharaṇaparvan ("the section relating to the robbing of the kine of Virāṭa," the 55th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Gograhaṇa). § 552: Meanwhile the spies of Duryodhana returned to Hāstinapura and informed Duryodhana, who was sitting with Droṇa, Karṇa, Kṛpa, Bhīshma, his brothers, and the Trigartas, that they had not found out the Pāṇḍavas, but that Kīcaka (b) had been slain (IV, 25). Kārṇa and Duḥçāsana proposed that the other spies should be sent (IV, 26). Droṇa said: "People like the Pāṇḍavas never perish, let the abode which the Pāṇḍavas are to occupy now be settled" (IV, 27). Bhīshma applauded Droṇa (IV, 28). Kṛpa recommended precautions (IV, 29). The Trigarta king, Suçarman, supported by Karṇa, proposed to invade the city of Virāṭa and to rob his kine and wealth, and thus to take revenge for the invasions of the Matsyas headed by Kīcaka. Duryodhana caused Duḥçāsana to array their forces. Suçarman set out towards the south-east on the seventh day of the dark fortnight, and the Kauravas on the eighth day (IV, 30). After Kīcaka had been slain, Virāṭa began to rest his hopes on the Pāṇḍavas. His brothers, Çatānīka and Madirāksha, and the king himself, and Sūryadatta and Çaṅkha, the eldest son of Virāṭa, put on their coats of mail. Virāṭa also caused Çatānīka to order chariots for Kaṅka, Vallava, Tantripāla, and Dāmagranthi (i.e. Yudhishṭhira, Bhīmasena, Nakula, and Sahadeva in disguise) (IV, 31). The Matsyas overtook the Trigartas shortly before sunset. Çatānīka and Viçālāksha penetrated into the heart of the Trigarta host. Virāṭa, with Sūryadatta in his van and Madirāksha in his rear, began a single combat from chariots against Suçarman (IV, 32). The night interrupted the battle for a while, but it began once more when the moon arose. Suçarman and his younger brother made Virāṭa prisoner, and the Matsyas began to fly; Bhīma would uproot a tree, but was prevented by Yudhishṭhira, lest the people should recognize them; then Bhīma, with Nakula and Sahadeva as protectors of his wheels, rushed against Suçarman, and the Matsya warriors, Virāṭa's son, and Yudhishṭhira, etc., followed him; the charioteer of Suçarman was dragged to the ground. Madirāçva came to the aid of Bhīma. Virāṭa leapt down from the chariot of Suçarman, seizing the mace of the latter, and ran in pursuit of him; Suçarman was seized by Bhīma, but set free by Yudhishṭhira (IV, 33). The Pāṇḍavas passed the night on the field of battle honoured by Virāṭa. As proposed by Yudhishṭhira, Virāṭa ordered messengers to proclaim the victory in the city. The messengers repaired to the city that very night, and at sunrise they proclaimed the victory at the city gates (IV, 34). Meanwhile Duryodhana, etc. (a), invaded the Matsya country and took away the kine. Hearing this, Bhūmiñjaya (i.e. Uttara), who had been left by the king in the empty city (IV, 35), and whose charioteer had been slain in a great battle, followed the advice of Kṛshṇa (who had been instigated by Arjuna) and sent Uttarā (IV, 36), who prevailed upon Bṛhannalā (= Arjuna in disguise) to become the charioteer of Uttara. Uttarā and her maidens asked Arjuna to bring fine clothes for their dolls when he had vanquished the Kurus (IV, 37). Seeing the host of the Kurus, Uttara became agitated with fear and jumped down from the chariot and began to flee, but was seized by Arjuna and made to hold the reins, while Arjuna had to fight (IV, 38). Bhīshma, Droṇa, etc., suspected the comer to be Arjuna, and many portents were explained by Droṇa in that sense. Karṇa blamed Droṇa, and Duryodhana said that if it were Arjuna the Pāṇḍavas must go into exile for twelve more years (IV, 39). Having reached the çamī tree, Arjuna ordered Uttara to fetch the weapons of the Pāṇḍavas, including Gāṇḍīva, which were deposited there (IV, 40). Believing that a corpse had been tied up in the tree, Uttara refused, but as Arjuna said: "There are only bows in that tree and no corpse," he climbed up and unwrapped and untied the bows (IV, 41). Arjuna explained to him to whom the different bows belonged, first mentioning the Gāṇḍīva (c), which is honoured by the gods, the Dānavas, and the Gandharvas (IV, 42-43). He then revealed to Uttara that they were the Pāṇḍavas and confirmed it by telling his ten names (β) (IV, 44). Arjuna took off the bracelets from his arms, etc., recalled to his mind all his weapons, and twanged the Gāṇḍīva with a dreadful sound, whence the Kurus knew that he was Arjuna, then he comforted Uttara by mentioning his former exploits (γ) and his preceptors in arms (δ) (IV, 45). Having taken down the banner with the figure of a lion he set up his own flagstaff bearing the figure of an ape with a lion's tail, which was a celestial illusion (māyā) contrived by Viçvakarman himself, for as soon as he thought of the gift of Agni, Agni ordered the superhuman creatures to take their usual place on that banner, which then fell down from the air on his chariot (read rathe with B.). Droṇa concluded from various omens that it was Arjuna (IV, 46). Duryodhana repeated to Bhīshma, Droṇa, and Kṛpa, his and Karṇa's opinion, that Arjuna must have broken his pledge, and asked Bhīshma to calculate the time. Karṇa blamed Droṇa for praising Arjuna (IV, 47), and declared that he would throw Arjuna down from his chariot that very day (IV, 48). Kṛpa blamed Karṇa and warned him from fighting alone with Arjuna, mentioning his exploits (ε); they ought all to fight with Arjuna and not Karṇa alone (IV, 49). Açvatthāman blamed Karṇa for his vain boast and declared that he would not fight with Arjuna (IV, 50). Bhīshma tried to mediate between Açvatthāman and Kṛpa on one side and Karṇa on the other side; he was of opinion that fight they must, and therefore this was not the time for quarrel. "The Brāhmāstra and the Vedas are never to be seen combined anywhere else than in Droṇa (and Açvatthāman)." He was supported by Açvatthāman and Duryodhana. Droṇa said: "Let such arrangements be made that Arjuna may not be able to approach Duryodhana in battle, and that Duryodhana may not be captured by the foe" (IV, 51). Having calculated the time ("an excess of five months and twelve nights in thirteen years"), Bhīshma declared that the Pāṇḍavas had not broken the pledge. Duryodhana said: "I will not give back the kingdom to the Pāṇḍavas." Bhīshma proposed that Duryodhana should proceed towards the capital with one-fourth of the army, and that one-fourth should escort the kine, while he, Droṇa, Karṇa, Açvatthāman, and Kṛpa should withstand the foes. This proposal was accepted; Bhīshma placed Droṇa in the centre, Açvatthāman on the left wing, Kṛpa on the right wing, and Karṇa in the van, and would himself stand in the rear (IV, 52). Droṇa recognized the top of Arjuna's banner, etc. Arjuna directed Uttara to the spot where Duryodhana was; the soldiers became so confounded that they could not even fly, and the kine turned back along the southern road (IV, 53). As Arjuna was advancing towards Duryodhana the Kurus fell upon him, especially Karṇa, who was supported by Citrasena, Saṅgrāmajit (the brother of Karṇa), Çatrusaha, Jaya, and Vikarṇa; Vikarṇa fled; Çatruntapa and many others were slain by Arjuna, so also Saṅgrāmajit; at last Karṇa took to flight (IV, 54). Duryodhana, etc., attacked Arjuna; Arjuna shot at Droṇa, Duḥsaha, Açvatthāman, Duḥçāsana, and Kṛpa, and wounded Bhīshma, Duryodhana, and Karṇa. Then Arjuna described to Uttara the banners, etc., of Kṛpa, Droṇa, Açvatthāman, Duryodhana, Karṇa, and Bhīshma (IV, 55). Indra, the gods, the Viçvas, the Açvins, the Maruts, the Yakshas, the Gandharvas, the Mahoragas, the Nāgas, the Rākshasas, the serpents, the Pitṛs, and the maharshis came to see the combat, likewise, sitting on the chariot of Indra, king Vasumanas, etc. (ζ); also Agni, Çiva, Soma, Varuṇa, Prajāpati, Dhātṛ, Vidhātṛ, Kubera, Yama, Alambusha, Ugrasena, Tumburu, etc., came there (IV, 56). Arjuna attacked Kṛpa, announced his name, and blew the Devadatta; at last Kṛpa was led away by his soldiers (IV, 57). Droṇa attacked Arjuna; Arjuna said: "I will not strike thee unless thou strikest me first"; with his own weapons Arjuna baffled the Aindra, Vāyavya, and Āgneya weapons, which were shot by Droṇa; a voice was heard in the sky applauding Droṇa; then Açvatthāman attacked Arjuna, which gave Droṇa an opportunity to leave the field (IV, 58). Açvatthāman cut off the string of the Gāṇḍīva and was applauded by the gods, and by Droṇa, Bhīshma, Karṇa, and Kṛpa. Arjuna attached a fresh string to the Gāṇḍīva. As Açvatthāman's arrows became exhausted Karṇa attacked Arjuna (IV, 59), who challenged him to a single combat and rebuked him, because he had fled after the slaughter of his younger brother. At last Karṇa, wounded, fled in a northern direction (IV, 60). Then Arjuna ordered Uttara to take him to Bhīshma; Uttara became afraid and was comforted by Arjuna (d), who enumerated some of his exploits and weapons. Duḥçāsana, Vikarṇa, Duḥsaha, and Viviṃçati rushed towards Arjuna; Duḥçāsana fled; Vikarṇa fell down; Duḥsaha and Viviṃçati were taken away by their warriors (IV, 61). At last the Kauravas fled (IV, 62); Duryodhana, Karṇa, and Duḥçāsana attempted in vain to defeat Arjuna (IV, 63). Then Bhīshma and Arjuna fought with the Prājāpatya, Aindra, Āgneya, Raudra, Kaubera, Vāruṇa, Yāmya, and Vāyavya weapons; the Gandharva Citrasena showed the two combatants to Indra, who showered celestial flowers down upon them; at last Bhīshma, wounded, lost consciousness and was led away by his charioteer (IV, 64). Duryodhana and then Vikarṇa attacked Arjuna; Vikarṇa ran back and ascended the chariot of Viviṃçati; Duryodhana was wounded and fled, and so did all the warriors (IV, 65). Stung by the censure of Arjuna, Duryodhana returned, and Karṇa, Bhīshma, Droṇa, Kṛpa, Viviṃçati, and Duḥçāsana rushed forwards to protect Duryodhana. Arjuna employed the weapon Sammohana which he had obtained from Indra, and blew his conch so that the Kurus were deprived of their senses. Then he caused Uttara to take away the white garments of Droṇa and Kṛpa, the yellow ones of Karṇa, and the blue ones of Duryodhana and Açvatthāman, but not those of Bhīshma, because he had not been stupefied. Arjuna wounded Bhīshma, who told Duryodhana to go back to his city, which they all did; Arjuna followed them for a while and worshipped Bhīshma, Droṇa, Açvatthāman, and Kṛpa; then he, with an arrow, broke the crown of Duryodhana and blew the Devadatta. Then he ordered Uttara to turn back. The gods returned to their respective abodes (IV, 66). A large number of Kuru soldiers issuing from the forest stood before Arjuna with joined palms and were spared. Arjuna said to Uttara: "Do not eulogize the Pāṇḍavas, but say that the feat is thy own." Then he replaced the weapons on the çamī tree; the monkey ascended to the sky, together with the other creatures on the flagstaff, the illusion (māyā) melted away, and Uttara's own banner was replaced upon the chariot. Arjuna entered the city in the guise of Bṛhannalā, having sent the cowherds to announce the victory (IV, 67). Virāṭa entered his city, followed by the four Pāṇḍavas, and dispatched an army to protect Uttara, though Yudhishṭhira said that, protected by Bṛhannalā, he was able to vanquish even the gods, the Asuras, the Siddhas, and the Yakshas. Meanwhile the messengers of Uttara came and Virāṭa ordered the highways to be decorated, etc., and began to play at dice with Yudhishṭhira, who again repeatedly praised Bṛhannalā. Virāṭa struck Yudhishṭhira with a die, but the blood was prevented from falling on the ground and was washed away by Kṛshṇā, who also, at the injunction of Yudhishṭhira, let Uttara enter alone, that Bṛhannalā should not see him bleeding. Uttara prevailed upon Virāṭa to ask Yudhishṭhira's pardon. When the bleeding had stopped, Bṛhannalā entered (IV, 68). Uttara said: "All this has been accomplished by a devaputra ('son of a deity') who then disappeared." Arjuna gave to Uttarā the garments he had brought (IV, 69).

Gohita = Vishṇu (1000 names).

[Gṛdhra - gomāyu - saṃvāda(ḥ)] ("the discourse between a vulture and a jackal"). § 653*b* (Āpaddh.): Bhīshma related: The young child of a brahman died and was taken to the burning-place; a vulture caused the lamenting kinsmen to leave the child, as the sun was soon to set, saying that the child could not be revived by their lingering. A jackal, black as a raven, rebuked them for not waiting till the sun had set, as the child might possibly revive. The vulture and the jackal alternately endeavoured to persuade them. The jackal mentioned that by Rāma's [i.e. Dāçarathi's] slaying the Çūdra named Çambuka, a brahmaṇa child was restored to life; similarly the son of R.-ṛ. Çveta. The vulture said that if only Rudra, etc. (a), would grant him a boon, the child might come back to life, and mentioned the spirits and Y. and Rā., etc., who haunt the burning-place, while the jackal reminded them that it was here on this "quiet and peaceful" spot that the Pitṛs by thousands took leave of the world. The jackal and the vulture continued to dispute, exhausted with hunger and thirst, wishing to get opportunity of devouring the child. Then Çaṅkara (i.e. Çiva) exhorted by his consort came, and, taking up a quantity of water in his hands, restored the child to life for a hundred years, and to the jackal and the vulture he granted a boon, in consequence of which their hunger was appeased. [Guruçishyasaṃvāda] ("discourse between a preceptor and his disciple"). § 782*g* (Anugītāparvan): Kṛshṇa said: Asked by his disciple "Whence am I? whence art thou?" etc., the preceptor said: This was declared by Brahmán himself to Ṛ.; it was known to the conclaves of Si. in the ancient kalpas. In days of old Ṛ. Bṛhaspati, etc. (δ) assembled together for asking one another, tired with their acts; placing Ṛ. Áṅgirasa at their head, they beheld, in the abode of Brahmán, Brahmán free from sin, and were instructed by him about how a good man should act, about Emancipation, etc. "Truth is the universe of being," light, ether, sun, wind, Indra and Prajápati are not seen as long as one has not attained to Adhyátma; religion has faith (çraddhá) for its indication; the number of elements (tattva) are twenty-four and one more (XIV, 35). Brahmán discoursed on the city of nine gates, the three qualities, etc., the qualities belonging to darkness (birth as Cáṇḍálas, etc.); Ṛ., Mu., and D. become deluded, desirous of pleasure (XIV, 36). Brahmán discoursed on passion (XIV, 37) and sattva (XIV, 38); the qualities are not completely separated from one another, etc. (XIV, 39); from the unmanifest first sprang the great soul, the source of all intelligence, the source of all qualities, called Mahán átmá, Vishṇu, Jishṇu, Çambhu, Buddhi, etc., pervading everything in the universe, stationed in the heart of all, endued with minuteness, lightness, and affluence (práptí); this is said to be the first creation (XIV, 40); the great (Mahán), who was first produced and called Ahaṅkára, is the second creation, the source of all creatures, a god, the creator of gods, etc. (XIV, 41); from Ahaṅkárá was born the five great elements; the práṇas, etc.; the eleven organs sprung from Ahaṅkára:—

Entity (bhútas).	On the Self (adhyátmaṃ).	Among Objects (adhibhútaṃ).	Among Gods (adhidaivatam).
1. ether (ákáça)	ear (çrotra)	sound (çabda)	the Quarters (Diçah).
2. wind (márutá)	skin (tvac)	objects of touch (sprashṭavya)	Lightning (Vidyut).
3. light (jyotis)	eye (cakshus)	form and colour (rúpa)	the Sun (Súrya).
4. water (ápah)	tongue (jihvá)	taste (rasa)	Soma.
5. earth (pṛthivī)	nose (ghráṇa)	scent (gandha)	the Wind (Váyu).
6.	feet (pádau)	motion (gantavyaṃ)	Vishṇu.
7. Apána	anus (páyu)	excreta (visarga)	Mitra.
8.	organ of generation (upastha)	vital seed (çukra)	Prajápati.
9.	hands (hastau)	actions (karmáṇi)	Çakra (Indra).
10.	speech (Vác: Vaiçvadevī)	what is spoken (vaktavyaṃ)	Vahni (Agni).
11.	mind (manas)	mental operation (saṅkalpa)	the Moon (Candramas).
12.	egoism (ahaṅkára: sarvasaṃsárakáraṇam)	consciousness of self (abhimána)	Rudra.
13.	understanding (buddhi: shaḍindriyavicáriṇi)	what is to be understood (mantavyam)	Brahmán.

Three are the seats of all existent objects: land, water, and ether; the mode of birth is fourfold (from eggs, germs, filth, or wombs) (specification); etc.; on the means of attaining to Brahmán; on the body; the emancipated one is Vishṇu, etc. (ε); † him praise brahmans, D., As., Y., Pç., P., birds, Rā., Bh., and M.-ṛ. († v. 1169) (XIV, 42); the kshatriya, elephant, lion, sheep, snake, bull, and male are of middle quality [i.e. rajas]; the nyagrodha, etc. (ζ) are the foremost among trees; Himavat, etc. (η) are the foremost among mountains; M. are the foremost of the gaṇas, etc. (θ); [in v. 1201 it is Vāyu who resides in the skin and is employed in the perception of touch, etc.] (XIV, 43); the day was first, then arose the night, etc.; the months are said to begin with the bright fortnights; the constellations begin with Çravaṇa; the seasons with winter (çiçira), etc. (ι) (XIV, 44); on the wheel of life (XIV, 45); on the duties that men should observe (XIV, 46); on renunciation, knowledge, and power (XIV, 47); on the different conceptions of Bráhman (a tree, a forest, unmanifest, etc.); it is impossible to attain to Purusha by any other means than goodness; some assert the unity of Kshetrajña and sattva; this is not correct; the relation of Purusha to sattva is like that of the gnat to the udumbara, or that of water-drops on the leaf of a lotus. The Ṛ. once more asked (XIV, 48) about the diversities of practice observed by men, and about the connection between the Kshetrajña and sattva (XIV, 49). Brahmán, quoting what was said by a preceptor to a disciple, said that abstention from harming any creature is the foremost of all duties, and the relation between sattva and Kshetrajña (Purusha) is that of the object (vishaya) to the subject (vishayitva), or like that of the matter to the maker, or like that of a lamp (with oil and wick) to him who lights it; sattva is manifest, while Purusha is unmanifest; knowledge is indispensable for attaining to felicity; from pradhāna develops mahat, from mahat ahaṅkāra, from ahaṅkāra the five elements; the qualities of the elements are the following:—

ether (space)	smell	taste	rūpa	touch	sound.
wind	smell	taste	rūpa	touch	sound.
light	smell	taste	rūpa	touch	sound.
water	smell	taste	rūpa	touch	sound.
earth	smell	taste	rūpa	touch	sound.
	1. agreeable	1. sweet	1. white	1. rough	1. Shaḍja.
	2. disagreeable	2. sour	2. dark	2. cold	2. Ṛishabha.
	3. sweet	3. pungent	3. red	3. hot	3. Gāndhāra.
	4. sour	4. bitter	4. blue	4. tender	4. Madhyama.
	5. pungent	5. astringent	5. yellow	6. hard	5. Pañcama.
	6. diffusive	6. saline	6. grey(?)	8. smooth	6. Nishāda.
	7. compact		7. short	9. slippery	7. Dhaivata.
	8. oily		8. long	7. oily	8. agreeable.
	9. dry		9. minute	10. painful	9. disagreeable.
	10. clear		10. gross	5. clear	10. compact.
			11. square	11. soft
			12. circular	12. ?

Space (ether) is the highest of the elements > (i.e. above it is) ahaṅkāra > buddhi > ātman (the soul) > the unmanifest avyaktaṃ > Purusha (XIV, 50). Brahmán said: The body is called the carriage of Bráhman, on which the individual soul drives about; the senses are the steeds; the mind is the charioteer, called also the bhūtātman (the individual soul), because it is the ruler of the elements (bhūtāni); the reins are the buddhi, called also kshetrajña (the individual soul), because it "proclaims power." The order of the dissolution is: 1, the creatures; 2, their qualities; 3, the elements; D., men, G., Pç., As., and Rā. have all sprung from Nature (svabhāvataḥ), and not from actions, nor from a cause; [the elements are called] the brahmans, who are creators of the universe [and] are born here again and again; all that springs from them is dissolved in those very five great elements like billows in the ocean; [beyond] those elements that compose the universe (viçvasṛgbhyas tu bhūtebhyaḥ, i.e. the gross elements) are the five great elements (i.e. the subtle elements; read °bhūtās with B.), and higher than these is the way of the emancipated (read mukto with B.); Prajāpati created all this by the mind alone; in the same manner Ṛ. attained to [the status of] D. by the aid of penance; (the wonderful effects of penance, by which one may be cleansed from the most horrible sins, etc.; men, P., deities, etc., have been crowned with success by penance alone); different degrees of bliss after death (Prajāpati; the great highest region—mahāntaṃ lokam uttamaṃ; the unmanifest accumulation of happiness—sukhopacayam avyaktaṃ; the unmanifest, i.e. the highest region of the great ones—avyaktaṃ mahatāṃ lokam uttamaṃ), according as one performs acts with expectation, being full of egoism (ahaṅkāra-samāyuktāḥ), or is devoid of selfishness (nirmamāḥ), and freed from egoism (nirahaṅkṛtāḥ) through yoga; freed from darkness and passion and adhering only to goodness, one becomes released from every sin and creates all things: such a one should be known to be [perfect] kshetrajña: he who knows him knows the Veda; that which begins with the unmanifest and ends with the gross qualities (°viçeshāntaṃ), has ignorance for its indication; selfishness (mama) is death, the reverse (na mama) is the eternal [Bráhman]; the high-minded ancients never applaud action: by action a creature is born with body; the indication of tranquillity is like what takes place in a dream; this is the goal of the emancipated ones who are intent on knowledge. The preceptor said: Thus addressed by Brahmán, Mu. acted accordingly and attained to felicity (lokaṃ). Kṛshṇa said: The pupil acted accordingly and then attained to emancipation (XIV, 51).

[Haṃsakākīyopākhyāna(m)] ("the story of the crow and the swans"). § 606 (Karṇap.): There lived on the other side of the ocean a rich vaiçya with many children, kind to all creatures. A crow lived upon the refuse of the dishes set before these children. The crow, becoming arrogant, came to disregard all birds. Once, certain swans, having their abodes in the Mānasa lake, came to that side of the ocean. The crow challenged their leader, saying that he would display 101 different kinds of motion, doing every 100 yojanas in a separate kind of motion: rising up and swooping down, etc. One of the swans said that they knew but that one kind of motion that all birds know, at which the assembled crows laughed aloud. The swans in vain tried to dissuade the crow. They began to fly. Beholding the diverse kinds of flight of the crow, the crows loudly rejoiced, while the swans laughed in mockery. For a moment the swan, with that one kind of slow motion, seemed to yield to the crow. As the swan flew westwards to the ocean, the crow was anxious and became almost senseless at not seeing any islands or trees whereon to perch when tired. At last the swan asked: "What is this kind of flight that thou hast now adopted? thou touchest the waters with thy wings and beak repeatedly." The crow suddenly fell down, and imploring the swan, prevailed upon him to take him on his back and carry him to the shore, and promised never to disregard others.

Hanūmad-Bhīma-samvāda(ḥ) ("conversation between Hanūmat and Bhīma"). § 425 (Bhīmakadalīkhaṇḍapraveça): Hanūmat said that he was the son of Vāyu with the wife of Keçarin, and the friend of the Sun's son Sugrīva, who, together with Çakra's son Vālin, used to be waited upon by all monkeys; further, that Sugrīva had been driven out by his brother, and dwelt for a long time with Hanūmat at Ṛshyamūka, when Rāma Dāçarathi, who was Vishṇu in human shape, with his wife and younger brother resided in the Daṇḍaka forest, and the Rākshasa Rāvaṇa carried away Sītā, Rāma's queen, from Janasthāna, assisted by the Rākshasa Mārīca, in the form of a deer marked with gems and gold (III, 147). Rāma slew Vālin and installed Sugrīva in the kingdom; Sugrīva sent monkeys to inquire after Sītā, and according to the communications of the vulture Sampāti, Hanūmat crossed the ocean, extending over 100 yojanas, saw Sītā in the abode of Rāvaṇa, burnt Laṅkā, and returned to Rāma. Rāma constructed a bridge across the deep, and, followed by myriads of monkeys, he slew Rāvaṇa, his brother, sons, and kindred, together with all the Rākshasas, and installed the pious Rākshasa chief Vibhīshaṇa in the kingdom in Laṅkā, and then returned with Sītā to his city Ayodhyā, and was established in the kingdom. Rāma granted to Hanūmat that he should live as long as the history of Rāma's deeds is remembered on earth. Rāma went to his own abode after having reigned 11,000 years. From that time all excellent objects of entertainment were, through the grace of Sītā, supplied to Hanūmat, who constantly stayed there hearing the deeds of Rāma sung by Apsarases and Gandharvas (cf. v. 11,323). He had obstructed this path of the gods to Bhīma with the view that none might defeat or curse him (III, 148).—§ 426: When Bhīma asked Hanūmat to show him the form he had when crossing the ocean, Hanūmat declared this to be impossible, as all things diminish according to the different yugas, even the Siddhas, gods, and great ṛshis. Then he described the Kṛta-yuga (b) and the Tretā (q.v., § 427), Dvāpara (q.v., § 428), and Kaliyuga (q.v., § 429).—§ 430: Hanūmat was prevailed upon to grant the request of Bhīma (see § 426), and showed himself as great as the Vindhya or the Maināka mountain, and said that he might become as long as he wished; he had himself been able to slay Rāvaṇa, but would not obscure the glory of Rāma. He pointed out to Bhīma the way to the Saugandhika-vana and the garden of Kubera, which was guarded by Yakshas and Rākshasas, and warned him against plucking the flowers himself, delivering a discourse upon the duties of the four castes, etc. (III, 150).

Hanumat or Hanūmat, name of a monkey, the son of Vāyu (the Wind). § 11 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 453.—§ 424

Hanūmatpratyāgamana ("the returning of Hanūmat"). § 534: Rāma and Lakshmaṇa were dwelling on the mountain Mālyavat. Rāma sent Lakshmaṇa to Kishkindhyā to threaten Sugrīva. Sugrīva, however, said that he had despatched monkeys in all directions to find out Sītā. After a month those who had been sent to the north, the east, and the west returned. After two months Hanūmat, Aṅgada, etc., returned from the south, after having pillaged Madhuvana (b). Hanūmat told that in a cavern of the palace of Maya the ascetic Prabhāvatī had shown them the way; on the shore they had seen the mountains Sahya, Malaya, and Dardura, then they had met Sampāti, the brother of Jaṭāyu(s) (c), and had informed him of everything; Sampāti then had directed them to Laṅkā (d), whereafter Hanūmat had crossed the ocean and slain the Rākshasī of the water, and had been recognized by Sītā from the words of Avindhya; Sītā had given him a jewel as a credential and told him, as a token, that Rāma on the mountain Citrakūṭa had shot a blade of grass at a crow; Hanūmat then had caused himself to be seized by the soldiers of Rāvaṇa, and set fire to Laṅkā.

[Haraṇāharaṇaparvan] ("the section relating to the handing over the gift of honour," the 17th of the minor parvans of the Mhbhr.). § 253: Kṛshṇa said that Arjuna had not insulted their family, but had rather enhanced their respect, and prevailed upon them that they, by conciliation, brought Arjuna back to Dvārakā, where he was united in marriage with Subhadrā and passed a whole year. The last time of his exile he passed in Pushkara. After the twelve years were complete he came back to Khāṇḍavaprastha. Draupadī at first was jealous, but then embraced Subhadrā. Kṛshṇa visited them at Indraprastha with Rāma, Akrūra Dānapati (the senāpati of the Vṛshṇis), Anādhṛshṭi, Uddhava (a disciple of Bṛhaspati himself), Satyaka and Sātyaki, and Kṛtavarman Sātvata, and Pradyumna, Çāmba, Niçaṭha, Çaṅku, Cārudeshṇa, Jhillin, Vipṛthu, Sāraṇa, Gada, etc., bringing with them many nuptial presents. Yudhishṭhira sent the twins out to receive them. Kṛshṇa gave them 10,000 kine from the country of Mathurā, and Bālhika horses as kanyādhana, etc. Rāma gave Arjuna as a wedding present (pāṇigrahaṇika) 1,000 elephants. Having spent many days in sports and merriment there, the Vṛshṇis returned to Dvāravatī with Rāma in the van, carrying with them the gems that had been given them by Yudhishṭhira. But Kṛshṇa remained with Arjuna at Indraprashtha, and they went a-hunting over the borders of the Yamunā. Subhadrā brought forth Abhimanyu, so called because he was fearless (abhī) and wrathful (manyumat, v. 8027). Upon his birth Yudhishṭhira gave away 10,000 kine and nishkas to the brahmans. The child became the favourite of Vāsudeva, etc., and acquired from his father the Dhanurveda (b). — Pāñcalī (Kṛshṇā, v. 8045) also obtained five sons (see § 159): Prativindhya, Sutasoma, Çrutakarman, Çatānīka, Çrutasena. They were born each at the interval of one year. Their jātakarman, cūḍa, and upanayana were performed by Dhaumya. After having studied the Vedas they acquired from Arjuna knowledge of all weapons celestial and human (I, 221).

Hemakara = Çiva (1000 names[2]).

Hemakūṭa. § 390*b* (Tīrthayātrāp.): On the mountain H. the utterance of words (so PCR., who follows the various reading cited by Nīl., "vācā yatra bhavan," instead of "vātābaddhā bhavan") caused the gathering of clouds and stones by thousands. There the recitation of the sacred scriptures was heard, but nobody was seen; in the evening and the morning there was seen fire, and biting flies would interrupt the austerities. Lomaça explained that formerly on this Ṛshabhakūṭa (i.e. Hemakūṭa) dwelt a great and resentful ṛshi, who was many hundred years old, and was named Ṛshabha. When practising austerities he had been spoken to by others, and in wrath he ordered the mountain to throw stones on him who should utter any word there, and forbade the wind to make any noise. Therefore, as soon as a man utters any word here he is forbidden by a roaring cloud. Formerly, when the gods came to the Nandā, many men came to see them, but the gods with Indra at their head did not like to be seen, and therefore they rendered the spot inaccessible by raising obstructions in the form of mountains, and from that day onwards men could not see that hill, far less ascend it. Lomaça further said: "Here all the gods performed the best sacrifices, and the marks thereof may be seen to this day, the grass resembling kuça grass, and many trees resembling yūpas; the gods and ṛshis dwell there to this day, and it is their fire which is seen in the evening and the morning. By bathing here one's sins are destroyed": III, 110, 9969 (parvataṃ, near the River Nandā and Aparanandā, visited by Yudhishṭhira, etc., on his tīrthayātrā).—§ 459 (Mārkaṇḍeyas.): III, 188, 12917 (parvataṃ, seen by Mārkaṇḍeya in the stomach of Nārāyaṇa).—§ 574 (Jambūkh.): VI, 6β, 198 (the second of the six varshaparvatāḥ of Jambudvīpa), 202 (beyond H. lies Harivarsha), 236 (identified with Kailāsa, q.v.), (θ), 246 (inhabited by Guhyakas).

Hiḍimbā, a Rākshasī, sister of Hiḍimba and by Bhīmasena, mother of Ghaṭotkaca. § 11 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 380.—§ 71 (Ādivaṃçāvatāraṇap.): I, 61, 2255 (prāptā H°ā Bhīmena yatra jāto Ghaṭotkacaḥ).—§ 83 (Ādivaṃçāvatāraṇa): I, 63, 2452 (by Bhīmasena, mother of Ghaṭotkaca).—§ 159 (Pūruvaṃç.): I, 95, ††3833 (do.).—§ 214 (Hiḍimbavadhap.): I, 152, 5940 (fell in love with Bhīmasena); 153, 5964, (5972), 5981, 6006; 154, 6007, (6011), 6041 (Rākshasī); 155, 6042, 6045, 6057, 6062 (Rākshasī), 6081 (bore Ghaṭotkaca to Bhīmasena).—§ 317 (Draupadīparitāpav.): III, 12, 554 (Rākshasī), 562, 570 (cf. § 214).—§ 600 (Ghaṭotkacavadhap.): VII, 176, 8010 (parāmarshaḥ kanyāyā H°āyāḥ kṛtaḥ purā, says Alāyudha).

[Hiḍimbavadhaparvan] ("the section relating to the killing of Hiḍimba," the 9th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.) (cf. Hiḍimba). § 214 (cf. III, 553 ff.): Not far from that place dwelt on a çāla tree the Rākshasa Hiḍimba, a cannibal with eight long and sharp-pointed teeth, etc. Scenting the odour of man, he sent his sister Hiḍimbā to slaughter them and bring them unto him. She fell in love with Bhīma, and, assuming a beautiful form, she asked him to become her husband, and promised to rescue him and his brothers and mother from her brother; but Bhīma ("neither men nor Gandharvas, nor Yakshas are able to bear my might," v. 5960) refused to awaken them (I, 152). Seeing that his sister did not return soon enough, Hiḍimba proceeded quickly to the spot, and, abusing his sister, he rushed at her, but was seized by Bhīma and dragged to a distance, lest his yells should awaken the brothers of Bhīma; fighting they broke down the trees, etc., and at those sounds the Pāṇḍavas woke up with their mother, and saw Hiḍimbā sitting before them (I, 153). She made herself and her love for Bhīma known to them. Arjuna offered to assist Bhīma; but Bhīma refused. Arjuna then said: "The morning twilight is about to set in; during the twilights Rākshasas become stronger; kill him without delay." Then Bhīma threw the Rākshasa to the ground, and he, dying, sent forth a terrible yell; then he doubled up his body and broke it in the middle. Arjuna thought there was a town not far off. Thereto they proceeded, followed by Hiḍimbā (I, 154). Bhīma would also have slain Hiḍimbā, but was prevented by Yudhishṭhira. It was agreed upon, that she should have Bhīma for her husband, until she got a son, sporting with him during the day, but bringing him back every evening. She then flew away with him, and sported with him on mountains, etc., until she had brought forth (the Rākshasa women bring forth the very day they conceive (v. 6077) a bald-headed son, whom they, on account of his baldness, called Ghaṭotkaca (ghaṭo hāsyotkaca iti, v. 6079), who developed into a young man the very hour he was born, excelled all Piçācas, etc., in strength, and soon acquired high proficiency in all weapons. Hiḍimbā then went away; and also Ghaṭotkaca, who promised that he would come when wanted for business, went away northwards. It was Indra who had created Ghaṭotkaca as an antagonist for Karṇa, in consideration of the latter's lance (I, 155). The Pāṇḍavas proceeded from forest to forest in the garb of ascetics, studying the Brāhma Veda, and the Vedāṅgas, and the nītiçāstra, through the countries of the Matsyas, Trigartas, Pāñcālas, and Kīcakas. Then they met Vyāsa, who comforted them and led them into the town of Ekacakrā to the house of a brahman. He ordered them to wait here, till he came back, and then went away (I, 156).

Hika, a Piçāca. § 607 (Karṇap.): VIII, 44, 2064 (Bahiç ca nāma Hīkaç ca Vipāçāyāṃ Piçācakau | tayor apatyaṃ Bāhīkā naishā sṛshṭiḥ Prajāpateḥ).

Hradapraveçana(ṃ) ("Duryodhana's entering the lake"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 346 (parva, i.e. Hradapraveçaparvan).

[Hradapraveçaparvan] ("the section containing Duryodhana's entering the lake," the 81st of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Hradapraveçana). § 612: The followers of Çakuni attacked the Pāṇḍavas; Arjuna and Bhīmasena came to the rescue of Sahadeva; Arjuna slew them; Duryodhana rallied the remnants of his chariots (many hundreds), etc., and urged them against the Pāṇḍavas and Dhṛshṭadyumna; they were exterminated in a moment by the Pāṇḍavas and the Sṛñjayas. Only Duryodhana remained alive. Requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra, Sañjaya recounted the numbers of the remnants of the Pāṇḍava army. Duryodhana abandoned his slain steeds and fled away on foot without a companion, towards a lake, taking up his mace, recalling the words of Vidura. The Pāṇḍavas (headed by Dhṛshṭadyumna) with Arjuna (with Gāṇḍīva) baffled the Kurus. In Duryodhana's army no great chariot-warrior was alive save Açvatthāman, etc. (α). Urged by Dhṛshṭadyumna, Sātyaki was about to slay Sañjaya; but Vyāsa came and caused him to be let off alive. He met with Duryodhana, whom he told the state of things, and who asked him to inform Dhṛtarāshṭra. Then Duryodhana, having charmed the waters, entered the lake. Sañjaya then met with Açvatthāman, etc. (α), and informed them; they fled away, at sight of the Pāṇḍavas, to the Kuru camp, taking Sañjaya up in the chariot of Kṛpa. The sun had set a little before. The outposts of the camp wept aloud. The old men proceeded towards the city with the princesses (description); also the camp-guards fled towards the city, and so did also the cowherds, etc., from fear of Bhīmasena. Yuyutsu reflected (β). With the permission of Yudhishṭhira he supervised the removal of the ladies. The sun was setting. Having entered Hāstinapura with the ladies, he informed Vidura (γ); urged by Vidura, he passed that night in his own abode, while Vidura went to the cheerless mansion of Dhṛtarāshṭra (IX, 29). Requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra (δ), Sañjaya related: The Pāṇḍavas wandered over the field in search of Duryodhana; tired, they took rest in their camp with all their soldiers. Then Açvatthāman, etc. (α) proceeded towards the lake and urged Duryodhana to fight with them against Yudhishṭhira. Duryodhana said that he would rest for that night and fight the next morning. Açvatthāman swore to slay the Pāṇḍavas and all the Pāñcālas in this night. Certain hunters who used every day to procure a basketful of meat for Bhīmasena overheard the conversation between Duryodhana and Açvatthāman, etc. (α), and informed Bhīmasena. The Pāṇḍavas all (Arjuna, etc. (ε) with Yudhishṭhira) started towards the lake (Dvaipāyana); hearing the noise caused by them Açvatthāman, etc. (α), took leave from Duryodhana and went away, and stopped under a banyan (IX, 30). Kṛshṇa advised Yudhishṭhira to slay Duryodhana by putting forth his own powers of illusion (ζ). Yudhishṭhira tauntingly addressed Duryodhana for having fled from battle (η); Duryodhana said that he had entered the lake not from fear, but in order to take rest. Yudhishṭhira asked Duryodhana to come out immediately and fight his foes. He answered that his kingdom might be taken by his foes, his own desire being to enter the woods and retire from the world (θ); Yudhishṭhira taunted him for such an answer, refusing to take the kingdom in gift from one who was unable to retain it by might (IX, 31).

Indra [2] = Skanda: III, 14643.

Indra [3] = Sūrya: III, 148.

Indra [4] = Çiva (1000 names [1]).

Indrābha, son of the elder Dhṛtarāshṭra. § 154 (Pūruvaṃç.) : I, 94, 3748 (seventh son of Dhṛtarāshṭra).

Indradamana, a prince, a descendant of Atri. § 677 (Mokshadh.) : XII, 235, 8592 (Ātreyaḥ, attained to infinite worlds by giving wealth). Cf. Ātreya.

[Indradarçana(ṃ)] ("seeing Indra," cf. Arjunābhigamanap.). § 330 : After some time Yudhishṭhira taught Arjuna in private the [Pratismṛti] science (upanishad, i.e. rahasyavidyā, Nīl. ; brâhman) that would reveal the whole universe to him, and told him to practise severe austerities; Bhīshma, etc. (a), know the fourfold (catushpāda) Dhanurveda, the Brāhma weapon, etc. ; all celestial weapons are in the possession of Indra, imparted to him by the celestials from fear of Vṛtra. Then Arjuna took up the Gāṇḍīva, etc., blessed by brahmans, Siddhas, and invisible spirits (bhūtāni), and by Kṛshṇā (she said : "Let no one amongst us be ever again born in the order of kshatriyas, but as brahmans; it is my great grief that in the assembly Duryodhana called me a 'cow' (i.e. 'to be enjoyed by many men,' Nīl.); but the grief of parting with thee is far greater"), who wished him success from Dhātṛ, Vidhātṛ, Hrī, Çrī, Kīrti, Dhṛti, Pushṭi, Umā, Lakshmī, Sarasvatī, the Vasus, Rudras, Ādityas, the hosts (gaṇān) of the Maruts, the Viçvedevas, and the Sādhyas, and wished him safety from the spirits (bhūtebhyaḥ) of the sky, earth, and heaven, and all other enemies ; and having walked round (pradakshiṇaṃ kṛtvā) his brothers and Dhaumya, he set out towards the north. All creatures left the path of Arjuna, who was urged by the desire of beholding Indra (? yuktasyaindreṇa yogena). He passed over many mountains, and reached Himavat in one day by means of his yoga ; then he passed over Gandhamādana, etc., and reached Indrakīla, walking night and day untiringly. Here he was addressed by a voice in the skies, and beheld Indra in the guise of a brahman, who told him to throw away his bow as of no use there, as this was the abode only of peaceful brahmans, and advised him to wish for heavenly bliss (lokāḥ) ; but Arjuna only asked for the celestial weapons, which Indra said he should obtain when he had seen Çiva (Tryaksha, Çūladhara, Bhūteça, Parameshṭhin). Then Indra disappeared, and Arjuna remained, devoted to yoga (III, 37).

Indradyumnasaras, a lake. § 184 (Pāṇḍu) : I, 119, 4639 (in the north, visited by Pāṇḍu). Cf. the prec.

[Indradyumnopākhyāna(ṃ)] ("history of Indradyumna"). § 468 (Mārk.) : The Pāṇḍavas asked Mārkaṇḍeya "Is there anybody that is older than thou?" He related : "The rājarshi Indradyumna, who had fallen from heaven, complained that his fame must have passed away, and asked me if I recognized him ; as I did not, he became a horse and carried me to the Himavat to the owl Prāvārakarṇa, who was older than I ; the owl we took to the lake Indradyumna to the crane Nāḍījaṅgha, who was older than the owl ; the crane indicated us the tortoise Akūpāra in the same lake. Akūpāra knew Indradyumna, and said that Indradyumna had planted the yūpa 1,000 times, and that this lake had been excavated by the feet of the cows given away by him to the brahmans. Then a chariot came from heaven, and a celestial voice called Indradyumna back to heaven (vv. 13343–5, three çlokas are cited ; v. 13343 : 'The report of a virtuous deed reaches heaven and earth ; as long as that report is heard, so long is the doer said to be in heaven'). He first brought me and the owl to our respective places, and then went away in that chariot." The Pāṇḍavas praised Mārkaṇḍeya for having caused Indradyumna to regain his sphere ; he said that Kṛshṇa also had raised the rājarshi Nṛga from hell and caused him to regain heaven (III, 199).

Indrajāla, a celestial weapon. § 512 (Ghoshayātrāp.) : III, 245, 14995 (Sthūlā (B. °ṇā-) karṇendrajālañ ca, employed by Arjuna).—§ 571 (Ulūkadūtāgamanap.) : V, 160, 5461 (?, "conjuror's tricks," PCR.), 5525 (?, do.) ; 161, 5570 (?, do.).—§ 580 (Bhīshmavadhap.) : VI, 59[13], 2633 (nihatendrajālāḥ). — § 608 (Karṇap.) : VIII, 60aaa*, 2998 (Sthūṇākarṇendrajālena) ; 64, 3238. — § 785 (Anugītāp.) : XIV, 77, 2251 (°pratimaṃ bāṇajālaṃ). [Indrajidvadha(ḥ)] ("the slaughter of Indrajit"). § 541 : Indrajit tied Rāma and Lakshmaṇa in a network of those arrows of his which he had obtained as boons. Sugrīva and the monkeys Susheṇa, etc. (a), surrounded them. Vibhīshaṇa came and roused them with the Prajñāstra ; Sugrīva extracted the arrows and applied the medicine viçalyā ; from the mountain Çveta a Guhyaka of Kubera's brought water, by rubbing one's eyes with which all invisible creatures became visible. Rāma, Lakshmaṇa, Sugrīva, etc. (β), rubbed their eyes. Having informed Rāvaṇa, Indrajit returned without having completed his daily sacrifice ; receiving a hint from Vibhīshaṇa, Lakshmaṇa killed Indrajit. Rāvaṇa would kill Sītā, but was dissuaded by Avindhya (III, 289).

[Indrajidyuddha(ṃ)] ("the encounter with Indrajit"). § 540 : Rāvaṇa sent Indrajit (who had vanquished Indra and received celestial weapons as boons) to fight Rāma, Lakshmaṇa, and Sugrīva. He first fought with Lakshmaṇa, then with Aṅgada, then he became invisible, but continued to fight (III, 288).

Indralokābhigamana ("Arjuna's journey to the world of Indra"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 321 (parva, i.e. Indralokābhigamanaparvan).

[Indralokābhigamanaparvan] ("the section relating to Arjuna's journey to the world of Indra," the 34th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). § 335: After the Lokapālas had gone away, Arjuna began to think of the chariot of Indra, which, guided by Mātali, came down full of swords, missiles, maces, thunderbolts, etc. (description), and great Nāgas with fiery mouths, and drawn by 10,000 horses of golden hue, and with the flagstaff Vaijayanta (described). Mātali, descending, invited him to ascend the chariot, as Indra waited to behold him, surrounded by gods, ṛshis, Gandharvas, and Apsarases. As that chariot cannot be obtained even by hundreds of rājasūyas and horse-sacrifices, and as even gods and Dānavas are not competent to ride in it, and as he that has no ascetic merit is not competent even to see or touch it, Arjuna first let Mātali ascend it and control the horses. Then he purified himself in the Gaṅgā, repeated his prayers (japyaṃ), gratified the Pitṛs, and bade farewell to the Mandara mountain (b). Then he ascended, in the chariot, through the sky and beheld thousands of vimānas of extraordinary beauty; there was no sun or moon or fire, but they blazed in light of their own, generated by virtue and ascetic merit; and the stars, which from earth look small in consequence of their distance, but are very large, were seen by him in their places; and rājarshis who had attained siddhi (siddhāḥ), and heroes fallen in battle, and those that had obtained heaven by tapas; and Gandharvas, and Guhyakas, and ṛshis, and Apsarases. Mātali explained to him that the stars were virtuous persons (sukṛtinaḥ) stationed in their respective places (dhishṇyeshu). At the gates he beheld Airāvata with four tusks equal to Kailāsa. Continuing along the path of the Siddhas, he passed through the regions (lokān) of [virtuous] kings, and thus passing through Svargaloka he beheld Amarāvatī (b), the city of Indra (III, 42).—§ 336: When Arjuna had entered the city, praised by Apsarases, Gandharvas, Siddhas, great ṛshis, and gods, he, at the request of Indra, went to the large starry way (nakshatramārga) named Suravīthī, where he met with the Sādhyas, Viçvas, Maruts, Açvins, Ādityas, Vasus, Rudras, Brahmarshis, Rājarshis with Dilīpa at their head, Tumburu, Nārada, Hāhā, and Hūhū. Then he beheld Indra, eulogized by Gandharvas headed by Viçvāvasu, etc., and was seated on Indra's own seat; and Gandharvas, headed by Tumburu, sang to them, and thousands of Apsarases (enumeration of seventeen) (a) danced there (III, 43).—§ 337: The gods and Gandharvas offered him arghya, etc., and caused him to enter the palace of Indra. There he received Indra's weapons, the thunderbolt (vajra) and lightning (açanīḥ). At the request of Indra he dwelt there for five years, and learned the dance and music of the Gandharvas from Citrasena, whom Indra gave him as a friend, but he was longing for his brothers and Kuntī and thirsting for revenge (III, 44).—§ 338: In the beginning, seeing that the eyes of Arjuna were fixed upon Urvaçī, Indra despatched Citrasena to Urvaçī, who gladly consented to choose Arjuna (b) for her lover (III, 45). Urvaçī related to Arjuna that as he had looked on her only in a solemn assembly of celestials held on account of his coming, where the Rudras, Ādityas, Açvins, Vasus, Maharshis, Rājarshis, Siddhas, Cāraṇas, Yakshas, and Mahoragas (i.e. great serpents) were present, and the Gandharvas played the vīṇās, and the Apsarases danced, Indra had caused Citrasena to send her to him, and that she was herself in love with him. Arjuna declared that he regarded her as the wife of his guru, and that he had been gazing at her because she was the mother of the Paurava race. She replied that the sons and grandsons of Pūru's race, that had come thither in consequence of ascetic merit, did all sport with the Apsarases without incurring any sin. But Arjuna swore that he regarded her as his mother. She then cursed him, saying that he should have to pass his time among females as a dancer and destitute of manhood, and then went away. Indra told him that this would come to pass in the thirteenth year of their exile, when they would live unknown to all, but having passed one year thus he would regain his manhood. The desire of the man that listens to this history of Arjuna never runs after lustful ends, etc. (III, 46).—§ 339: One day the brahmarshi Lomaça in the course of his wanderings went to the abode of Indra. As Lomaça within himself wondered how Arjuna, being a kshatriya, had attained the seat of Çakra, who was worshipped by the gods themselves, Çakra, knowing his thoughts, explained to him who Arjuna (b) really was; that moreover the Asuras, the sons of Danu, named the Nivātakavacas, who dwell in Pātāla, proud of a boon they had acquired, were planning the destruction of the gods, and could not be slain by others than either Kṛshṇa (c) or Arjuna; but Madhusūdana (i.e. Kṛshṇa) should not be urged when the task was insignificant, lest his energy should consume the whole universe; therefore Arjuna should slay them. At the request of Indra, seconded by Arjuna, Lomaça went to the Kāmyaka wood to Yudhishṭhira in order to bring him news about Arjuna and recommend him to visit the tīrthas, and follow him and protect him from the Rākshasas (d) (III, 47).—§ 340: As Dhṛtarāshṭra learnt from Dvaipāyana of Arjuna's arrival and stay at Indra's abode, he expressed his anxiety to Sañjaya (III, 48). Conversation of Sañjaya and Dhṛtarāshṭra about Arjuna's encounter with Çiva in the guise of a Kirāta, etc. (III, 49).—§ 341: During the five years of Arjuna's absence the Pāṇḍavas fed themselves and 10,000 snātaka brahmans, some with and some without fire, by killing deer, Yudhishṭhira going towards the east, Bhīma towards the south, and the twins towards the west and north (III, 50).—§ 342: Having heard of the way of life of the Pāṇḍavas, Dhṛtarāshṭra expressed his anxiety before Sañjaya, fearing Bhīmą with his iron (çaikya) mace, etc. Sañjaya commemorated how Kṛshṇa, Dhṛshṭadyumna, Virāṭa, Dhṛshṭaketu, and the Kaikeyas had visited the Pāṇḍavas in the Kāmyaka wood, whose conversations Sañjaya had learnt through spies and formerly told Dhṛtarāshṭra. Sañjaya further related that Kṛshṇa had consented to become the charioteer of Arjuna (enumeration of kings seen by Kṛshṇa at the rājasūya) and to assist the Pāṇḍavas in the battle, together with Rāma, Akrūra, Gada, Çāmba, Pradyumna, Āhuka, Dhṛshṭadyumna, and the son of Çiçupāla, and Yuyudhāna, and the Kaikeya and Pāñcāla princes and the Matsya king, and Kṛshṇa had declared that Yudhishṭhira should, along with his brothers living at Hāstinapura, rule the earth (III, 51).

[Indra-Mataṅga-saṃvāda(ḥ)] ("the conversation between Indra and Mataṅga"). § 735*b* (Ānuçāsanik.): Bhīshma said: Once a brahman obtained a son named Mataṅga, who, though procreated by a person of a different order, had, however, the rites of infancy and youth performed according to the ordinances laid down for brahmans. His father, desiring to perform a sacrifice, ordered him to collect the articles, and he set out riding in a car drawn by a young ass, that bore away the car to its mother; Mataṅga repeatedly struck the animal with his goad on its nose; but the old she-ass consoled it, saying, "A Cāṇḍāla it is that is driving thee; there is no severity in a brahman." Asked by Mataṅga, the she-ass revealed to him that his father was a Çūdra following the profession of a barber, who begat him upon a brahman woman excited with desire; "thou art, therefore, a Cāṇḍāla by birth." Mataṅga returned home, told his father what he had heard, retired to the forest, and began to undergo the austerest penances in order to acquire the status of a brahman, so that he scorched the very deities. Indra came and offered him boons, but the status of a brahman, he said, could not be won by penances (XIII, 27). Mataṅga then stood for 100 years on one foot. Indra came once more and said: "From the order of brute life one attains to the state of humanity; if born as a human being, one is sure to take birth as a Pukkaça or a Cāṇḍāla; after 1,000 years one attains to the status of a Çūdra; then after 30,000 years that of a Vaiçya; after a period that is sixty times longer, that of a kshatriya; after a period that is sixty times longer than this, to that of a fallen brahman; after a period 200 times as long, to that of a brahman living by the profession of arms; after a period 300 times as long, to that of a brahman reciting the Gāyatrī and sacred mantras; after a period 400 times as long, to that of a brahman conversant with the entire Vedas and the scriptures" (XIII, 28). Mataṅga then practised austerer penances, standing on one foot for 1,000 years in yoga-meditation. Indra once more came and said the same. Mataṅga then repaired to Gayā, and there passed 300 years on one foot in yoga, and was reduced to only skin and bones, and dropped down on the ground from sheer exhaustion. Indra came quickly; now Mataṅga accepted the boons that he should be celebrated as chandodeva, and obtain the worship of all women, and his fame should become unrivalled in the three worlds (XII, 29).

[Indravijaya(ḥ)] ("the victory of Indra"). § 555: Questioned by Yudhishṭhira about the misery endured by Indra and Çacī, Çalya related: Once the Prajāpati Tvashṭṛ, from antipathy to Indra, created a son who had three heads (one for reading the Vedas; the second for drinking wine; with the third he looked as if he were about to absorb the four quarters), called Viçvarūpa. Beholding his austerities, Indra became alarmed, and in vain caused Apsarases to tempt him; then he slew him with his thunderbolt (thinking, "I shall afterwards perform some religious ceremony"), but was yet afraid of his appearance, and prevailed upon a carpenter to cut off the heads (promising, "in sacrifices men will give thee the head of the sacrificial animal as thy share"); out flew birds—(1) partridges, (2) sparrows and hawks, (3) quails. Then Tvashṭṛ created Vṛtra, who swallowed up Indra. The gods created Jṛmbhikā ("yawning"); Vṛtra yawned (therefore yawn attaches itself to the living breath of animated beings), and Indra emerged. Tvashṭṛ strengthened Vṛtra; Indra returned; the gods consulted with the munis, and sitting on Mount Mandara, they thought of Vishṇu (V, 9). Indra, with D. and Ṛ., repaired to Vishṇu (b), who taught them, with Ṛ. and G., to make eternal friendship between Indra and Vṛtra ("I may not be killed either by what is dry or wet, stone, wood, weapons, by day or night, by Indra or D.," said Vṛtra). Indra then slew him in the evening with froth blended with the thunderbolt, in which Vishṇu had entered. D., G., Y., Rā., M.-U., and Ṛ. glorified Indra. But Indra was overpowered by falsehood (anṛta) and brahmanicide (brahmahatyā), and became bereft of his consciousness, and lay concealed in water; the earth became treeless, the rivers were interrupted, the rains ceased (V, 10). Then Ṛ. and D. (also P. and G., ch. 16) crowned Nahusha as king of D., giving him their tapas: "whatever being may stand within thy sight—D., Dā., Y., Rā., P., G., Bh.—thou shalt absorb his power." Nahusha then assumed a sensual turn of mind, amusing himself with Aps. and devakanyāḥ and Viçvāvasu, Nārada, G., and the six seasons, in Nandana, and on Kailāsa, Himavat, Mandara, Çveta, Sahya, Mahendra, Malaya, etc. He ordained that Çacī should wait upon him. Çacī (c) repaired to Bṛhaspati, who promised soon to unite her with Indra (V, 11). Nahusha became enraged; the earth, with As., G., K., M.-U., trembled; Nahusha reminded of Indra's behaviour towards Ahalyā (d), etc.; at last the gods promised to bring him Çacī; but Bṛhaspati, as a brahman, would not abandon her, quoting a saying of Brahmán (e); he told her to ask for time from Nahusha, and so did the gods, led by Agni (V, 12). Çacī obtained the boon from Nahusha, and returned to Bṛhaspati. D., with Agni, repaired to Vishṇu, who said: "Let Indra offer sacrifice to me; having performed the horse-sacrifice, he will regain his dignity." D. and Ṛ. and Bṛhaspati proceeded to the spot where Indra was, performed a horse-sacrifice, and divided the brahmahatyā among trees and rivers and mountains and earth and women; and Indra was free from fever, but vanished again from fear of Nahusha. Çacī worshipped Niçā (Night), who caused Upaçruti to appear, and Çacī prayed to Upaçruti (V, 13). Upaçruti, followed by Çacī, crossed the heavenly groves and many mountains and came to the northern side of Himavat, and thence to the sea; in an island there was a large lake with an assemblage of lotuses; there they found Indra in the fibres of a lotus-stalk, and, praising him, Çacī implored his help against Nahusha (V, 14). Indra said that Nahusha had been strengthened by the Ṛ. with the merits of offerings to D. and P. Çacī should tell Nahusha to visit her on a vehicle borne by Ṛ. Nahusha consented. Çacī prevailed upon Bṛhaspati to find out Indra, which he did by means of a sacrifice, prevailing upon Agni to search for him. Agni came back within the twinkling of an eye, having searched everywhere except in the waters, which he dared not enter ("fire rose from water, the kshatriya caste from the brāhmaṇa caste, and iron from stone; the power of these, which can penetrate all other things, has no operation upon the sources from which they sprang") (V, 15). Bṛhaspati praised Agni (f) and strengthened him with hymns of the Veda; Agni then found out Indra (cf. ch. 14), and soon returned and informed Bṛhaspati. This came with D.-ṛ. and G., and praised Indra by referring to his former deeds (that he had killed the great Asura Namuci and the Asura Çambara and Vala and Vṛtra, as supra). Indra increased little by little, and having assumed his original form he grew strong, and asked what business yet remained, as he had killed Viçvarūpa and Vṛtra. Bṛhaspati told him of Nahusha, who had been strengthened by the power of the D.-ṛ., etc. (v. ch. 11), and how Nahusha, carried by M.-ṛ., journeyed from world to world. Lp. Kubera and Yama Vaivasvata and Soma and Varuṇa came and rejoiced that Viçvarūpa and Vṛtra had been killed, and they and Agni promised him their assistance against Nahusha on the condition that they and Agni should have their shares in sacrifices, and that Kubera (g), Yama (h), and Varuṇa (i) should this day be crowned along with Indra (V, 16). While Indra, with Lp. and D., was considering the means of slaying Nahusha, the M.-ṛ. Agastya came and rejoiced that Viçvarūpa and Vṛtra had been killed, and related how Nahusha had been hurled from heaven (Svarga). The D.-ṛ. and B.-ṛ., weary with carrying him, had questioned him if certain mantras (prokshaṇe gavāṃ) pronounced by Brahmán (so B.) were authentic (pramāṇaṃ), to which Nahusha, bewildered by the dark principle (tamas), had answered in the negative; Ṛ. reproached him, as M.-ṛ. had formerly declared them to be authentic. Nahusha touched Agastya's head with his foot, and instantly lost his power and luck (çrī), and was agitated with fear. Then Agastya cursed him: "Fall thou from heaven, the effect of all thy good deeds (puṇya) has been exhausted; for 10,000 years thou shalt be a snake upon earth; then thou mayst come back to Svarga." D., M.-ṛ., P., Y., Sp. (bhujagāḥ), Rā., G., devakanyāḥ, and the bands of Aps., and tanks, rivers, mountains, and the sea came and rejoiced (V, 17). Indra, glorified by G. and Aps., mounted Airāvata. Agni, the M.-ṛ., Bṛhaspati, Yama, Varuṇa, and Kubera accompanied him. Indra went to the three worlds with D., G., and Aps., and was praised by Aṅgiras (i.e. Bṛhaspati?) with hymns of the Atharvaveda. Then he granted Atharvāṅgiras (= Aṅgiras) the boon that his name would be connected with this Veda and that he would get a share in sacrifices. United with Çacī he protected the world virtuously (V, 18).

[Indrota-Pārīkshitīya(ṃ)] ("the narrative of Indrota and Janamejaya Pārikshit"). § 652*b* (Āpaddh.): Bhīshma said: There was, in days of yore, a king Pārikshit (! so B.; C. °rī°) Janamejaya; from want of judgment he became guilty of killing a brahman; then all the brahmans, with his priests, abandoned him; burning day and night with regret, the king retired into the woods; deserted by his subjects also, and consumed by repentance, he underwent the most rigid austerities. In order to purify himself of the sin of brahmanicide he interrogated many brahmans, and wandered from country to country over the whole earth. One day he met Indrota Çaunaka, who rebuked him for his brahmanicide and reminded him of the messengers of Yama in the abode of Yama (XII, 150). Janamejaya meekly listened to the reproof, saying that he was much afraid of Yama; he knew that, according to the Vedas, wretches like himself had forfeited all claim to the respect of the world, and had after death to dwell in hell like Pulindas and Çabaras (so C. and B.; PCR. Khasas), and he sought instruction from Indrota, who told him to repent and, knowing the Vedas, etc, act in such a way that the brahmans might not be angry with him; Çaunaka said that his kinsmen and friends would call him sinful because he instructed Janamejaya. Janamejaya swore never again to injure the brahmans (XII, 151). Indrota discoursed to the repentant king on the means of cleansing himself, quoting a verse sung by Yayāti about the sacredness of Kurukshetra, etc. (α), and recommending him to go to Mahāsaras, etc. (β), quoting also a saying of Manu and a verse of Satyavat. Mahāsaras, etc. (γ), are so sacred that one guilty of fœticide becomes cleansed at even 100 yojanas from them. Manu has said that by diving in water after thrice reciting the Aghamarshaṇa [mantras] (v. the note of PCR., p. 498), one reaps the fruits of the final bath in a horse-sacrifice. The gods and Asuras in days of yore were instructed by M.-ṛ. Bṛhaspati, the preceptor of the gods, how one should cleanse himself from sin. Indrota then assisted Janamejaya, cleansed of his sins, in the horse-sacrifice (XII, 152).

Jalapradānika, adj. ("relating to the gift of water to the deceased"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 348 (°ṇi parva, i.e. Jalapradānikaparvan).
[Jalapradānikaparvan] ("the section relating to the gift of water to the deceased," the 85th of the minor parvans of the Mhbhr.; cf. Jalapradānika). § 618: Janamejaya inquired of Vaiçampāyana as to what Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc. (α), did after the death of Duryodhana. Dhṛtarāshṭra's grief; Sañjaya comforted him, and suggested the performance of the obsequious rites of the fallen heroes. Dhṛtarāshṭra lamented (β); Sañjaya rebuked and consoled him (γ). Vidura addressed Dhṛtarāshṭra (XI, 1) and comforted him (δ) (XI, 2); charmed by Vidura's discourse, Dhṛtarāshṭra asked him to continue his observations on the vanity of human life; Vidura continued his discourse, and described human life as it runs (XI, 3) from the very beginning (XI, 4), comparing it to a wilderness abounding with dangers (XI, 5), explaining the comparison according to the religion of Moksha (XI, 6); asked by Dhṛtarāshṭra, Vidura continued his discourse on human life (XI, 7). Dhṛtarāshṭra swooned away, but was comforted by Vyāsa, etc. (ϵ), wept and lamented; Vyāsa comforted him by explaining the secret history of the slaughter (he had seen the Earth in Indra's hall, complaining before the gods and D.-ṛ. and Nārada, and Vishṇu consoling her, saying that Duryodhana would cause her burden to be lightened by a battle in Kurukshetra), etc. (ζ). Dhṛtarāshṭra promised to live; Vyāsa disappeared (XI, 8). Requested by Janamejaya (η), Vaiçampāyana related: After Duryodhana had been slain, and all the troops slaughtered, Sañjaya, deprived of his spiritual sight, came back to Dhṛtarāshṭra, and recommended him to cause the obsequial rites to be performed. Dhṛtarāshṭra swooned away; Vidura comforted him ("Time drags all kinds of creatures away," etc.) (XI, 9). Dhṛtarāshṭra resolved to visit the field of battle with the Kuru ladies in his company. The Kuru ladies (Gāndhārī, Kuntī, etc.) were placed in chariots under Vidura's supervision; the royal household, with a large number of the citizens, started from Hāstinapura (XI, 10). Having proceeded a kroça, Dhṛtarāshṭra met with Açvatthāman, etc. (θ). Kṛpa related to Gāndhārī the fall of Duryodhana in unfair fight, and their nightly attack on the camp of the Pāṇḍavas (ι); then Açvatthāman, etc., took leave of Dhṛtarāshṭra in order to conceal themselves from the wrath of the Pāṇḍavas, and urged their steeds towards the banks of the Gaṅgā, where they separated from one another: Kṛpa went to Hāstinapura; Kṛtavarman to his own kingdom; Açvatthāman set out for the abode of Vyāsa; "before the sun rose; it was after this that the sons of Pāṇḍu encountered Açvatthāman and vanquished him" (XI, 11). Yudhishṭhira and his brothers set out in order to meet Dhṛtarāshṭra, accompanied by Kṛshṇa, etc. (κ); they met the weeping ladies of the royal house on the way (λ), and saluted Dhṛtarāshṭra, who reluctantly embraced Yudhishṭhira, and broke an iron statue of Bhīma (that had been kept ready by Kṛshṇa), mistaking it for Bhīma himself; he then grieved for having slain Bhīma, fell down, and was raised by his charioteer Sañjaya; Kṛshṇa enlightened him, and told him not to cherish wrath (XI, 12). Certain maid-servants came and washed Dhṛtarāshṭra; then Kṛshṇa again addressed him, assuring him that the Pāṇḍavas were perfectly innocent (μ); then Dhṛtarāshṭra embraced Bhīma, etc. (ν) (XI, 13). Commanded by Dhṛtarāshṭra, the Pāṇḍava brothers with Kṛshṇa then proceeded to see Gāndhārī, who wished to curse Yudhishṭhira. The great R. Vyāsa, capable of proceeding everywhere with the fleetness of the wind, and capable of seeing the heart of every creature with his spiritual vision, understood her evil intentions, and having cleansed himself by the water of the Gaṅgā, he suddenly appeared, and told her not to be angry with the Pāṇḍavas, but remember that she had every day for the eighteen days that battle lasted, when Duryodhana asked her to bless him, said: "Thither goes victory where righteousness is." Gāndhārī admitted that she and Dhṛtarāshṭra should protect the Pāṇḍavas with as much care as Kuntī herself protected them, the fault being with Duryodhana, etc. (ξ); but Bhīma's unfair combat with Duryodhana in the presence of Kṛshṇa moved her wrath (XI, 14). Bhīma addressed Gāndhārī, and extenuated his fault in having slain Duryodhana unfairly ("Duryodhana had formerly himself vanquished Yudhishṭhira unfairly," etc.) (ο). Gāndhārī then blamed Bhīma for drinking Duḥçāsana's blood, when Vṛshasena had deprived Nakula of his steeds; Bhīma denied that he had really drunk Duḥçāsana's blood; "Karṇa knew this well; seeing Nakula deprived by Vṛshasena of his steeds, I caused the rejoicing brothers to be filled with dread; when the tresses of Draupadī were seized, I uttered certain words in rage; I dared not leave that vow unaccomplished lest I should be regarded as having swerved from the duties of a kshatriya." Gāndhārī then inquired after Yudhishṭhira, who appeared before her and invoked her curses on himself for his sinful slaughter of all her sons; Gāndhārī's glance (under the cloth that covered her eyes) blasted a nail of Yudhishṭhira's toe. Arjuna moved away to the seat of Kṛshṇa, and also the other Pāṇḍavas became restless. Gāndhārī then comforted the Pāṇḍavas and dismissed them. They then met with their mother Kuntī, who wept seeing their many scars. Draupadī wept for her children and Abhimanyu; Kuntī consoled her, and so did Gāndhārī (mentioning Vidura's predictions) (XI, 15).

Arjuna Kārtavīrya, § 394), while Gādhi, the king of Kānyakubja, was dwelling in the wood, there was born to him a beautiful daughter, Satyavatī, whom Ṛcīka Bhārgava asked in marriage. Gādhi said that, according to a family custom, the bridegroom must give a dowry of 1,000 brown steeds with a single sable ear each (so PCR. translates ekataḥ çyāmakarṇānāṃ, cf. V, 3740, and Gālavacarita). Ṛcīka obtained them from Varuṇa (the spot where the horses appeared was thence named Açvatīrtha) and married Satyavatī in Kānyakubja on the Gaṅgā, the very gods being companions of the bridegroom (janyāḥ). Then his father Bhṛgu came to see him and his wife, and being pleased with Satyavatī, granted her the boon that a son should be born to herself and to her mother, telling her that during their season they should embrace, her mother an açvattha tree and herself an udumbara tree, and eat two pots of rice and milk (caru) which he had prepared, having ransacked the whole universe. Then Bhṛgu disappeared. They, however, made an interchange both of the pots and of the trees which they embraced. Knowing this by his divine knowledge, Bhṛgu came once more and told Satyavatī that she had been deluded by her mother, and that therefore she would give birth to a brahman of kshatriya character (kshatravṛttiḥ) and her mother to a kshatriya of brahman character (brāhmaṇācāraḥ). At her repeated entreaties, however, he granted her that not her son but her grandson should be of that description. The son of Satyavatī was J., who excelled many ṛshis in Vedic lore (Vedādhyayanena), and to whom the whole Dhanurveda appeared spontaneously (pratyabhāt), and likewise the four kinds of weapon (astrāṇi): III, 115, 10167.—§ 396: J. devoted himself to the study of the Veda and to penances. He married Reṇukā, the daughter of king Prasenajit, and lived with her in his hermitage practising austerities. She gave birth to five sons, of whom Rāma was the youngest. Once when Reṇukā had been filled with desire, seeing the Mārttikāvata king Citraratha bathing, together with his wife, J. ordered his sons Rumaṇvat (the eldest), Susheṇa, Vasu, and Viçvāvasu to kill their mother, but as they refused to do so he cursed them, so that they lost their senses and behaved like beasts and birds. Then he ordered Rāma to do it, and he immediately severed her head with an axe, and then prevailed upon J. to grant him that Reṇukā might be restored to life and not remember that she had been slain, that he himself might not be affected by this sin, that his brothers might recover their former state, and that he himself might be unrivalled on the field of battle and obtain a long life: III, 116, 10183, 10185, 10188.—§ 397: Once when the sons of J. had gone out, Arjuna Kārtavīrya, the lord of the country near the seashore (Anūpapatiḥ), came to the hermitage, and, though he was praised by Reṇukā, he carried away the calf of the homadhenu and pulled down the trees. J. told this to Rāma, who then rushed towards Arjuna and cut down his 1,000 arms with his arrows and at last killed him. Then the sons of Arjuna came while Rāma was away, and with their arrows killed J., who did not fight, but repeatedly shouted the name of Rāma. When they had gone away, Rāma returned to the hermitage: III, 116, 10196, 10197.—§ 602 (Droṇavadhap.): VII, 190ν*, 8727.—§ 606*b* (Paraçu-Rāma): VIII, 34, 1583 (Bhārgavānāṃ kule jātaḥ, father of Paraçu-Rāma).—§ 638*b* (Rāmop.): XII, 49, 1744 (Bhārgavaṃ, son of Ṛcīka and Satyavatī), 1746 (father of Rāma), 1761 (°dhenvāḥ . . . vatsaṃ), 1765 (slain by the sons of Arjuna Kārtavīrya; cf. §§ 395–7).—§ 665 (Mokshadh.): XII, 208ι*, 7600 (Ṛcīkasya putraḥ, one of the ṛshis of the north).—§ 702 (do.): XII, 293a*, 10762 (had praised Vishṇu).—§ 721*b* (Viçvāmitrop.): XIII, 4, 245 (his birth; cf. § 395).—§ 733 (Rāmahrada): XIII, 25, 1734 (°gatiṃ labhet, sc. by bathing in Mahāhrada).—§ 745*c* (Cyavana-Kuçikasaṃv.): XIII, 55, 2912 (Bhṛguçārdūlaḥ, Ṛcīka will beget J., who will master the Dhanurveda).—§ 750*b* (Bisastainyop.): XIII, 93a*, 4416, (4444), (4464), (4495) (etymology of his name), (4521).—§ 751*b* (Çapathavidhi): XIII, 94a*, †4550, (4571).—§ 752*b* (Chattropānahotpatti): XIII, 95, 4606 (°eç ca saṃvādaṃ Sūryasya ca), (4618); 96, 4629, 4630, (4633), 4636 (terrifies the Sun (Sūrya), who in order to pacify him gives him an umbrella and a pair of sandals).—§ 759 (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 106δ*, 5200 (among the ṛshis who have attained to heaven through observance of fasts).—§ 766 (do.): XIII, 127, (6073).—§ 770 (do.): XIII, 151ι*, 7117 (Ṛcīkatanayaḥ, one of the gurus of Dhaneçvara in the north).—§ 775 (do.): XIII, 166ζ*, 7670 (Ṛcīkaputraḥ, one of the ṛshis of the north).—§ 782*c* (Arjuna Kārtavīrya): XIV, 29, 823 (father of Rāma).—§ 786*f* (Nakulākhyāna): In former times J. purposed to perform a çrāddha; his homa-cow came to him, and he milked her himself. Assuming the form of Krodha (anger), Dharma entered the vessel of milk, desirous of putting J. to the test, and spoiled the milk. J. was not enraged. Krodha, in the form of a brahman lady, then said to him that the saying was false that the Bhṛgus were wrathful, since he had been subdued by J., and asked his forgiveness. J. said that as the milk had been destined to the Pitṛs, Krodha ought to introduce himself to them. Through the curse of the Pitṛs, Krodha became a mungoose until he had spoken disrespectfully of Dharma. Then he wandered about to sacrifices and other sacred places, employed in censuring great sacrifices, until he came and censured the horse-sacrifice of Yudhishṭhira, who was Dharma's self; then he became freed from his curse: XIV, 92, 2887, (2894). Jambha[2], a Rākshasa. § 537 (Rāma-Rāvaṇayuddha): III, 285a*, 16365 (follower of Rāvaṇa).

Jambhaka, a prince. § 281*b* (Sahadeva): The son of J. lived on the banks of Carmaṇvatī, and had been spared by Vāsudeva in their former hostilities: II, 31, 1111 (°syātmajaṃ nṛpaṃ, vanquished by Sahadeva).

Jambū. § 574*i* (Jambūkh.): On the south of Nīla and the north of Nishadha there is a huge eternal jambū tree (Eugenia jambolana, rose-apple), named Sudarçana, and adored by Si. and Cā.; it grants every wish, and after it Jambūdvīpa has its name; the tree is 1,100 yojanas high and touches the very heavens. The circumference of a fruit of that tree measures 2,500 cubits; when ripe the fruit bursts, and pours out a silvery juice which becomes a river, which passes round Meru and comes to the northern Kurus; the drinking of that juice conduces to peace of mind, no thirst is felt ever after, nor decrepitude. On that spot there is found a species of gold, called jāmbūnada, used for celestial ornaments and like the complexion of indragopaka (cochineal) insects. The men who live there are of the complexion of the morning sun: VI, 7, 273 (°-vṛkshaḥ).—§ 757*e* (Meru): XIII, 102, †4862.

Jambūdvīpa, name of the dvīpa south of Meru, and also of the whole circular central dvīpa. § 354 (Nalopākhyānap.): III, 79, 3066.—§ 574 (Jambūkh.): VI, 1, 9 (°sya maṇḍalaṃ); 6δ*, 207 (beside Meru lie four dvīpas—Bhadrāçva, Ketumāla, Jambudvīpa, and Uttarāḥ Kuravaḥ; J. therefore in this passage cannot design the whole central dvīpa, the centre of which is Meru).—§ 574*i* (Jambū): VI, 7, 274 (named after the jambū tree Sudarçana).—§ 575*b* (Çākadvīpa): VI, 11, 409 (i.e. the central dvīpa opp. to Çākadvīpa), 428.—§ 575 (Bhūmip.): VI, 12, 467 (i.e. the central dvīpa).—§ 623 (Rājadh.): XII, 14, 404, 405 (beside Meru lie Jambudvīpa, Krauñcadvīpa (to the south!), Çākadvīpa (to the east!), and Bhadrāçva (to the north!), cf. VI, 207).—§ 759 (Ānuçāsanik): XIII, 107ζ*, 5338.—§ 785 (Anugītāp.): XIV, 85, 2548. Cf. Jambūkhaṇḍa, Jambuparvata.

Jambuka[1], a warrior of Skanda. § 615*u* (Skanda): IX, 45η*, 2576.

Jambuka[2], v. Çambuka.

Jambūka, a warrior of Skanda. § 615*u* (Skanda): IX, 45η*, 2578.

Jambūkhaṇḍa = Jambūdvīpa: VI, 226 (beside Meru), 401 (i.e. the central dvīpa). Cf. next.

Jambūkhaṇḍavinirmāṇa ("the measurement of Jambūkhaṇḍa"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 337 (°ṃ parva).—§ 11 (do.): I, 2, 520 (i.e. Jambūkhaṇḍavinirmāṇaparvan).

[Jambūkhaṇḍavinirmāṇaparvan (°va)] ("the section relating to the measurement of Jambūkhaṇḍa," the 67th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. °vinirmāṇa). § 574: Janamejaya inquired how the Kurus and the Pāṇḍavas and Somakas fought on Kurukshetra. Vaiçampāyana began the description of the battle. The Pāṇḍavas occupied the western part, turned towards the east, beyond Samantapañcaka. The force was collected from the whole of Jambudvīpa. Yudhishṭhira and Duryodhana fixed watchwords. Seeing Duryodhana (description), the Pāñcālas were filled with joy, and blew their conches, etc.; Arjuna and Kṛshṇa also blew their conches Devadatta and Pāñcajanya, at which the Kurus were alarmed. Various ill omens were beheld. Both parties settled rules and made covenants regarding the different kinds of combat (VI, 1). Vyāsa visited Dhṛtarāshṭra, and offered to grant him spiritual vision that he might witness the battle. Dhṛtarāshṭra did not like to see the slaughter of his kinsmen. Vyāsa then granted it to Sañjaya, that he might narrate everything to Dhṛtarāshṭra; weapons would not hurt him; he would come out of the battle with life. Vyāsa informed Dhṛtarāshṭra of the omens (α), and appealed to him for peace; but Dhṛtarāshṭra urged the disobedience of his sons. Vyāsa enumerated to Dhṛtarāshṭra the omens that indicate victory, and recommended negotiation, as victory was uncertain (VI, 2, 3). Then Vyāsa departed. Seeing the many hundreds of millions of men that had come together at Kurujāṅgala to lay down their very lives for the sake of the earth, Dhṛtarāshṭra inquired of Sañjaya after the attributes of Earth, and the details about the countries and cities from which they had come. Sañjaya discoursed on the merits of the earth, and the various classes of creatures inhabiting it. Their twenty-four constituents are described as Gāyatrī (VI, 4). Dhṛtarāshṭra inquired about the rivers, mountains, and provinces of the earth, and their dimensions. Sañjaya spoke of the five elements and their attributes, earth being the foremost. Then he began the description of the dvīpa of Sudarçana (VI, 5). Sañjaya discoursed on the six mountains (varshaparvatāḥ, B.) that extend from the eastern to the western ocean, and are the resort of Si. and Cā.: Himavat, etc. (β), and the varshas between them—Bhārata-varsha, etc. (γ); Mālyavat, Gandhamādana; Meru (description); the four islands beside Meru—Bhadrāçva, etc. (δ); the bird Sumukha (b); on Meru sport D., G., As., Rā., and Aps., and Brahmán, Rudra, and Çakra perform sacrifices; Tumburu, etc. (ε), adore the gods with hymns; the seven Ṛshis and Kaçyapa repair thither on every parvan-day (i.e. the day of full moon and that of new moon); upon the summit is Uçanas with the Daityas; the jewels, etc., come from Meru, one-fourth part being enjoyed by Kubera, who gives only one-sixteenth to men. On the northern side of Meru is a forest of karṇikāras; there Paçupati (the creator of all things), together with his celestial attendants and Umā, sports, bearing a chain of karṇikāra flowers reaching down to his feet, and his three eyes resembling three suns; the Siddhas can behold him, but not persons of wicked conduct; from the summit of that mountain Gaṅgā (c) falls down. On the western side of Meru is Ketumāla (d), and also Jambūkhaṇḍa, Gandhamādana (e). The last varsha in the north and Bharata's varsha in the south are both of the form of a bow. Amongst these seven varshas that which is further north excels the one to its immediate south in respect of longevity, stature, health, righteousness, pleasure, and profit. The huge mountains of Hemakūṭa are also called Kailāsa, where Vaiçravaṇa (i.e. Kubera) lives in joy with Gh. To the north of Kailāsa and near the mountains of Maināka there is the huge and beautiful mountain Hiraṇyaçṛṅga. Beside this the delightful lake Bindusaras (f), with golden sands. Rā. reside on Himavat, etc. (θ). The two dvīpas Nāgadvīpa and Kaçyapadvīpa are the two ears of this hare-shaped region; the beautiful mountains of Malaya, having rocks like copper plates, form another part of Jambūdvīpa, making it resemble a hare (VI, 6). Dhṛtarāshṭra asked Sañjaya about the regions to the north and the east side of Meru, and about the mountains of Mālyavat. Sañjaya told about the Uttarakurus (Uttarāḥ Kuravaḥ) (g). East of Meru the foremost region is Bhadrāçva (h). The jambū tree (i). Mālyavat (j) (VI, 7). Dhṛtarāshṭra inquired about the names of all the varshas and mountains. Sañjaya related of Ramaṇaka, etc. (ι). Dhṛtarāshṭra became absorbed in meditation about his sons; then he said: "Time destroys and creates everything; Nara and Nārāyaṇa, omniscient, destroying all creatures (sarvabhūtahṛt), the gods call him Vaikuṇṭha, men call him Vishṇu" (VI, 8). Dhṛtarāshṭra asked about Bhārata-varsha (k), about which Duryodhana and the Pāṇḍavas are so covetous. Sañjaya said that the Pāṇḍavas were not covetous about it, but Duryodhana, Çakuni, etc.; then he mentioned in Bhārata-varsha, the beloved land of Indra, etc. (αα), inhabited by Aryans and Mlecchas, the mountains—Mahendra, etc. (κ); rivers ("all mothers of the universe and productive of great merit")—Gaṅgā, etc. (λ); countries—Kuru-Pāñcālāḥ, etc. (μ); and countries in the south—Draviḍāḥ, etc. (ν); the tribes of the north—Mlecchāḥ, etc. (ξ); and in the east and the north—Çūdrābhīrāḥ, etc. (ο) (VI, 9). Dhṛtarāshṭra inquired about life, strength, etc., in Bhārata-varsha, and of Haimavata-varsha and Harivarsha. Sañjaya related of the four yugas—Kṛta, etc. (π). The portion that remains of the Dvāpara age is small. Haimavata-varsha is superior to Bhārata-varsha, and Harivarsha superior to Haimavata-varsha, in every respect (VI, 10).

Jantūpākhyāna(ṃ) ("episode relating to Jantu"). § 11: I, 2, 447.—§ 408 (Tīrthay.): Questioned by Yudhishṭhira, Lomaça said: King Somaka had 100 wives, but was a long time sonless. At last, when he and his wives were old, he got a son Jantu, whom all the wives surrounded with the utmost care. One day when Jantu had been stung by an ant at his hip and cried, Somaka, afraid of losing him, inquired of his ṛtvij if there were a ceremony by which a man might get 100 sons. He was told to sacrifice Jantu and let his wives take a smell of the smoke of his fat; then 100 sons would be born to him, and Jantu himself would be born once more of the same mother, with a mark of gold on his back (III, 127). The sacrifice was performed notwithstanding the screams of the wives, and after ten months 100 sons were born, of whom Jantu was the eldest and most beloved and superior in merit, and had that mark of gold. When the guru and Somaka had died, the purohita was grilled in a terrible hell for having performed that sacrifice, and Somaka prevailed upon Dharmarāja (who said "one cannot enjoy or suffer for another person's acts") that he should be likewise tormented for the same period before he entered the blessed regions. Here they (the Pāṇḍavas, etc.) spent six nights (III, 128).

[Jāpakopākhyāna(ṃ)] ("the episode about the reciter of sacred mantras"). § 662*b* (Mokshadh.): A brahman, who was a reciter, conversant with the six Aṅgas, of the Kuçika race and son of Pippalāda, acquired spiritual insight into the Aṅgas; at the foot of Himavat he was devoted to the Vedas; silently reciting Gāyatrī, he practised austerities for 1,000 years in order to attain to Brâhman. Then Gāyatrī (Sāvitrī) appeared and granted him the boon that his wish for recitation should go on increasing, and his absorption into meditation (samādhi) be more complete. She added that he should not have to go to hell, thither where great brahmans go, but to the region of Brahmán, and that Dharma, etc. (α), would come to him in person. He continued engaged in recitation for 1,000 celestial years. Then Dharma came to him and told him to cast off his body in order to win regions of bliss; but he did not wish to reside in heaven except with his body, but only took pleasure in recitation. Time, Mṛtyu, and Yama came and told him the same. The brahman gave them arghya and pādya. Ikshvāku, who had set out on a tīrthayātrā, came and was given arghya and pādya. The brahman wished to give him something; Ikshvāku, as a kshatriya, would not take anything except battle, but only himself give; at last, however, he asked to be allowed to enjoy the fruits of the brahman's recitations, but when the brahman consented he would not take them, and asked the brahman what those fruits were. The brahman did not know, as his recitations had never been connected with any special purpose; he told the king that Truth required that he should take them as he had asked for them (the signification of Truth). Dharma and Heaven (Svargaḥ) seconded the brahman. Ikshvāku wished to give his own merits instead, but in vain; then Ikshvāku agreed to accept half the brahman's merit on the condition that the brahman should take half of his own, but he was refused. At this time two ungainly individuals came there, Virūpa and Vikṛta (afterwards disclosed to be Desire and Wrath); Virūpa said that he owed Vikṛta the merits of the gift of a cow, but that Vikṛta refused to take repayment (in the form of the merit of having given two kapilā cows with calves to an uñchavṛtti); Vikṛta declared that Virūpa owed him nothing; they asked Ikshvāku to decide the question. Ikshvāku hesitated; the brahman threatened to curse him. Ikshvāku would give him some drops of water that had fallen upon his hand. Virūpa approved of this arrangement, and said that Vikṛta really did not owe him anything; "we appealed to thee for thy own sake." Bhīshma said that a reciter goes to Brahmán, or Agni, or Sūrya, whose attributes he catches stupefied by attachment (rāgeṇa); and so also if he goes to Soma, etc. (β); if, however, he goes to those regions after having freed himself from attachment, he enters the Supreme and Imperishable, and becomes Brâhman (XII, 199). The brahman accepted, worshipped Dharma, etc. (γ), and set himself to his recitations again. Asked by Ikshvāku, he agreed that he should go half and half with the king. Indra came there with D., Lp., Sā., Vi., etc. (δ), and said to the brahman and the king that they had attained to success ([saṃ]siddhaḥ). Those two withdrew their senses from the objects of the world; fixing Prāṇa, etc. (ε), in the heart, they concentrated the mind in Prāṇa and Apāna united together, etc. (description). Brahmán welcomed the fiery flame that had issued from the head of the brahman, saying: "Reciters attain to the same end as the yogins; but as regards reciters, the honour is ordained for them that Brahmán himself shall advance to receive them"; then he once more imparted consciousness into that splendour; the brahman then entered the mouth of Brahmán, and so did the king. The deities rejoiced. Brahmán said that so also would he that reads "the great Smṛti" and "the Anusmṛti" (i.e. resp. "the six Aṅgas and Manu, etc.," Nīl.) in this way attain to the same region with Brahmán; and so also he who is devoted to Yoga. Then Brahmán disappeared, and the deities, having honoured Dharma, returned to their respective abodes (XII, 200).

Jarāsandhavadha ("the killing of Jarāsandha"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 317 (parva, i.e. Jarāsandhavadhaparvan). — § 11 (do.): I, 2, 408 (= do.).

[Jarāsandhavadhaparvan] ("the section relating to the killing of Jarāsandha," the 23rd of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Jarāsandhavadha). § 276: As Kṛshṇa thought that Jarāsandha was incapable of being vanquished in battle even by all the gods and Asuras, but might be vanquished in a personal struggle with bare arms (prāṇayuddha, PCR.), and as there was in himself policy, in Bhīma strength, and in Arjuna ability to protect them, he thought that Jarāsandha should be made to challenge Bhīma, and Kṛshṇa therefore obtained the permission of Yudhishṭhira that Bhīma and Arjuna followed him. They set out in the garb of snātakas, with Bhīma in the van, from the land of the Kurus to the Padmasaras, over Kālakūṭa, Gaṇḍakī, Mahāçoṇa, Sadānīrā (v. 794 runs thus in V.: Gaṇḍakīñca Sadānīrāṃ Çarkarāvarttam eva ca), the rivers on the Ekaparvataka (? see BR.) and Pūrvā (i.e. Eastern) Koçalā (B. has pūrvāṃç ca Koçalān), Mithilā, Mālā, Carmaṇvatī, Gaṅgā, Çoṇa, towards the east, dressed in garments of kuça-grass (instead of kuçacīracchadā V. has Kuçāmboraḥsthalaṃ), to the Māgadha land. When they came to the mountain of Goratha, they beheld the Māgadha town (II, 20).—§ 277: Girivraja is surrounded by the five large hills of Vaihāra, Varāha, Vṛshabha, Ṛshigiri, and Caityaka. It was there that Gautama begat Kākshīvat, etc., upon the çūdra woman Auçīnarī, and was visited by the kings of Aṅga, Vaṅga, etc. There dwell the Nāgas Arbuda, Çakravāpin, Svastika, and Maṇināya. Manu had ordered the Māgadhas never to be afflicted with drought; Kauçika and Maṇimat had favoured the country. The Pāṇḍavas and Kṛshṇa entered the city by breaking down the peak of Caityaka, worshipped by the Bārhadrathas and the citizens with perfumes and flower garlands, where Bṛhadratha had slain the cannibal Ṛshabha, and made of his hide (māsatālābhiḥ, see BR.; Gauḍapāṭha: māṃsanālābhiḥ, Nīl.) three drums [which the brothers broke, v. 814, not in V.]. As evil omens had been seen, the purohitas made Jarāsandha mount an elephant and carried fire about him (paryagnyakurvan), and he entered upon (dīkshitaḥ) a sacrifice with vows (niyamasthaḥ) and fasts (upavāsaparaḥ). Kṛshṇa, Bhīma, and Dhanañjaya entered the city without weapons in the guise of snātakas, snatched from the flower-vendors the garlands they had exposed for sale, and attired in robes of various colours and decked with garlands and ear-rings they entered the abode of Jarāsandha, who welcomed them, and hearing from Kṛshṇa that Bhīma and Arjuna in consequence of a vow would not speak before night, quartered them in the sacrificial apartments (yajñāgāre) and retired to the palace (rājagṛhaṃ). At midnight he came to them, as he always observed the vow, that as soon as he should hear of the arrival of snātakas, even at midnight, he would immediately come out and grant them an audience. As he questioned them about their strange attire, which was unsuitable for snātakas, and their breaking down the Caityaka peak, and why they would not accept the worship he offered, Kṛshṇa gave him some explanations (v. 848 ff.: snātaka-vratino, rājan! brāhmaṇā, kshatriyā, viçaḥ | viçeshaniyamāç caishām aviçeshāç ca santy uta | viçeshavāṃç ca satataṃ kshattriyaḥ çriyam ṛcchati), and declared that they had come as his foes (II, 21). As Jarāsandha said that he did not remember to have injured them, Kṛshṇa told him that they were sent by Yudhishṭhira to set at liberty the princes whom Jarāsandha intended to slaughter as a sacrifice to Çiva, because sacrificing human beings to the gods was never used (v. 864); he reminded him of the destruction of Dambhodbhava, Kārtavīrya, Uttara, and Bṛhadratha, and challenged him to set free the monarchs or to fight. Jarāsandha chose to fight, and ordered Sahadeva to be installed on the throne. Then he thought of his generals Kauçika and Citrasena, who had formerly been Haṃsa and Ḍimbhaka. Kṛshṇa, remembering that, according to the command of Brahmán, Jarāsandha was not to be slain by him or by the Madhus, did not himself desire to slay him (II, 22). Jarāsandha having chosen to fight with Bhīma, the purohita brought pigment, garlands, etc., and propitiatory ceremonies (kṛtasvastyayanaḥ) were performed by a brahman; and likewise Bhīma, having consulted with Kṛshṇa, had propitiatory ceremonies pronounced (kṛtasvastyayanaḥ). When Jarāsandha had taken off his crown and arranged his hair, they fought with their clenched fists as their only weapons. The combat began at the first day of the month Kārttika, and lasted, without intermission or food, till the thirteenth; on the fourteenth night Jarāsandha desisted from fatigue, and Kṛshṇa obscurely intimated that he should now be killed (II, 23). At the instigation of Kṛshṇa, Bhīma threw Jarāsandha into the air a hundred times, pressed his knee against his backbone and broke his body in two with a terrible roar, so that the citizens became dumb with terror and many women were prematurely delivered. Leaving the lifeless body at the palace gate, they went out of the town riding on Jarāsandha's celestial chariot, which Kṛshṇa caused to be made ready, it being adorned with a celestial flagstaff and incapable of being vanquished by any king, upon which Indra and Vishṇu had fought in the battle about Tārakā, riding upon which Indra had slain ninety-nine (navatīr nava) Dānavas, which had been obtained by king Vasu from Vāsava (i.e. Indra), from Vasu by Bṛhadratha, and from him by Jarāsandha. And Kṛshṇa thought of Garuḍa, who sat upon the chariot along with the frightfully roaring creatures on its flagstaff. Kṛshṇa then released his relatives and ordered them to assist Yudhishṭhira at his rājasūya. Stopping on a level plain outside the town, he was adored by the citizens, and he installed Sahadeva, the son of Jarāsandha, in the sovereignty of the Magadhas. Then they arrived at Indraprastha. Thereupon Kṛshṇa, having taken leave of Yudhishṭhira, etc., set out for his own city, riding upon that same celestial chariot that had been given to him by Yudhishṭhira, the Pāṇḍavas having circumambulated him (pradakshiṇam akurvanta) (II, 24).

Jaratkāru[1], a ṛshi, husband of Jaratkāru and father of Āstīka. § 26 (cf. Āstīkap.): Sauti said: The ascetic J., when going about and practising religious austerities, one day saw his ancestors, the Yāyāvaras, hanging, heads down, in a great hole by a rope of vīraṇa fibres, which was eaten into on all sides by a rat; he was told that it was because he had no offspring. He then promised to marry, if he might get a wife of the same name as his own, and who would be given to him in charity (I, 13). At last he married Jaratkāru, the sister of Vāsuki, the king of serpents (I, 14), who intended by this marriage to neutralize the curse inflicted on the serpents by their mother (Kadrū, q.v.). Jaṭāsuravadha(ḥ) ("the killing of Jaṭāsura"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 322 (°aḥ parva, i.e. Jaṭāsuravadhaparvan).

[Jaṭāsuravadhaparvan] ("the section treating of the killing of Jaṭāsura," being the 37th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). (Cf. Jaṭāsuravadha.) § 435: One day, after the Rākshasas with Ghaṭotkaca had departed, while Bhīma was a-hunting, and Lomaça and the other ṛshis had gone away to bathe and collect flowers, the Rākshasa Jaṭāsura, who had followed Yudhishṭhira in the guise of a brahman versed in all the çāstras, with the object of possessing himself of the arms of the Pāṇḍavas and of Draupadī, began to flee away with the arms and Draupadī and the three Pāṇḍavas. Sahadeva extricated himself, and snatching the sword Kauçika, he began to call Bhīmasena. Yudhishṭhira reproached him, saying that the Rākshasas are the root of virtue and know virtue (dharmaṃ) best, and that the Rākshasas, gods, Pitṛs, Siddhas, Ṛshis, Gandharvas, etc., depend for their lives on men, etc. Yudhishṭhira then made himself ponderous. Sahadeva was about to attack the Rākshasa, when Bhīma appeared mace in hand. The Rākshasa set them down, and he and Bhīma began to fight with trees, like Vālin and Sugrīva, and then with rocks, and at last by wrestling, till Bhīma, having dealt a blow on the neck of the Rākshasa, lifted him up, and dashed him on the ground and severed his head from his body, and then presented himself before Yudhishṭhira (III, 157).

[Jatugṛhaparvan] ("the section relating to the lac-house," the 8th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). (Cf. Jatuveçmākhya[ṃ parva].) § 213: Vaiçampāyana briefly related the plan of Saubala, Duryodhana, Duḥçāsana, Karṇa, and Dhṛtarāshṭra to burn the Pāṇḍavas and Kuntī in a lac-house, and their escape. Asked by Janamejaya, he then began to relate it more fully. The Pāṇḍavas frustrated all the plans of murdering them laid by Duryodhana, etc., without speaking of them, in obedience to the counsels of Vidura. People began to speak in all public places of installing Yudhishṭhira on the throne instead of Dhṛtarāshṭra. Duryodhana represented to Dhṛtarāshṭra that this would for ever exclude himself and his brothers from the throne (I, 141). Duryodhana, Karṇa, Çakuni, and Duḥçāsana held a consultation together, and Duryodhana prevailed upon Dhṛtarāshṭra to exile the Pāṇḍavas to Vāraṇāvata ("Açvatthāman is on my side; with him follow Droṇa and Kṛpa; Vidura is dependent on us for his means of life, though he is covertly with the foe") (I, 142). Duryodhana and his brothers began gradually to win over the people to their side by grants of wealth and honours, while Dhṛtarāshṭra suggested to the Pāṇḍavas to visit the festival of Paçupati at Vāraṇāvata. Fully understanding the motives of Dhṛtarāshṭra, Yudhishṭhira let Bhīshma, Vidura, Droṇa, Bāhlīka, Somadatta, Kṛpa, Açvatthāman, Bhūriçravas, Gāndhārī, etc., give them their benedictions, and the Pāṇḍavas having performed propitiatory rites in order to obtain the kingdom, set out for Vāraṇāvata (I, 143). Duryodhana prevailed upon Purocana to reach Vāraṇāvata that very day upon a swift chariot, and to construct a house of inflammable materials and burn the Pāṇḍavas and Kuntī (I, 144). The people, who were distressed by the departure of the Pāṇḍavas, and angry with Dhṛtarāshṭra, were calmed by Yudhishṭhira. Vidura, in obscure words (cf. Mlecchavācā, v. 5803), warned Yudhishṭhira, who explained the meaning to Kuntī. They set out on the 8th day of the month of Phālguna when Rohiṇī was ascendant (I, 145). They were received with great honours by the citizens of Vāraṇāvata and installed by Purocana first in a palace that had been built for them, and after ten days in the lac-house called Çiva (Çivākhyaṃ). Yudhishṭhira scented the smell of fat, etc., and told it to Bhīma, but resolved to seem unsuspicious (I, 146). A miner, sent by Vidura, told Yudhishṭhira that Purocana would put fire to the house on the fourteenth night of the dark lunation, and made a large subterranean passage (I, 147). They lived there for a year. Then on a certain night Kuntī fed a large number of brahmans; and there came also a Nishāda woman with her five sons, who became intoxicated and lay down in the house to sleep. The Pāṇḍavas then set fire to the house and burnt Purocana and the Nishādas, while they themselves escaped through the subterranean passage and fled in haste, Bhīma carrying his mother and brothers (cf. III, v. 546 foll.). The citizens thought they had been burnt to death (I, 148). A person sent by Vidura took the Pāṇḍavas and Kuntī to the other side of the Gaṅgā in a boat (I, 149). The miner had covered the hole he had dug with ashes, and the townspeople thought that the Nishāda woman with her five sons were Kuntī and the Pāṇḍavas, and sent to Dhṛtarāshṭra to inform him that they had been burnt to death together with Purocana. Dhṛtarāshṭra wept in deep sorrow, and caused the funeral rites to be performed. Meanwhile the Pāṇḍavas having crossed the Gaṅgā proceeded in the darkness to the south and reached a dense forest. Yudhishṭhira then prevailed upon Bhīma to carry Kuntī and his brothers (I, 150). The motion of Bhīma's legs raised a wind like that of the months of Çuci and Çukra, while he trod down the trees and swam across streams. Towards evening they sat down in a terrible forest under a banyan-tree. Kuntī was thirsty, and Bhīma proceeded to a pool at a distance of a gavyūti, and brought water by soaking his upper garments. When he found them sleeping from fatigue, he lamented that Yudhishṭhira would not yet allow him to slay Duryodhana, etc., and sat there awake keeping watch over them (I, 151).

Jayadratha[2], an ancient king. § 267 (Yamasabhāv.): II, 8, 337 (in the palace of Yama).

Jayadrathavadha(ḥ) ("the slaughter of Jayadratha"). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 339 (°aḥ parva, i.e. Jayadrathavadha-parvan).

[Jayadrathavadhaparvan] ("the section including the slaughter of Jayadratha," the 75th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Jayadrathavadha). § 598: Dhṛtarāshṭra lamented the slaughter of his troops; "formerly in the abode of Somadatta, who was devoted to truth, I used to hear delightful sounds" (instead of grief and lamentations, as now in the houses of Viviṃçati, etc. (α)); then he mentioned Kṛshṇa's ambassadorship, the match at dice, that he and Vidura, etc. (β) did not approve of; "possessed of sovereignty, the Pāṇḍavas will ever listen to the voice of Çalya, etc." (γ); "none can fight Bhīmasena, etc. (δ); only Duryodhana, etc. (ε), would venture to resist them"; he asked what the principal leaders (ζ) did (VII, 85). Saṅjaya rebuked Dhṛtarāshṭra for his folly in bringing about the battle (VII, 86). Droṇa arrayed his divisions. The warriors shouted in anger "where is Arjuna?" etc. (η). Droṇa assured Jayadratha of protection by Somadatta's son, etc. (θ). Droṇa's array was in part a çakaṭa and in part a circle, 48 miles long, and the width of its rear was 20 miles; in the rear was another impenetrable array in the form of a lotus; and within that a needle, in the mouth of the needle was Kṛtavarman; next came the Kāmboja king, etc. (ι); behind them all was Jayadratha at one side of the needle. At the head of the çakaṭa was Droṇa (b). Si. and Cā. wondered. Duryodhana rejoiced (VII, 87). After the Rudra-hour (Raudre muhūrte) had set in Arjuna made his appearance, while portents appeared in nature. Then Nakula's son Çatānīka and Dhṛshṭadyumna arrayed the divisions of the Pāṇḍavas. Durmarshaṇa (Dhārtarāshṭra) took up his position in the van in order to oppose Arjuna; Arjuna was at the very van of his army. Kṛshṇa and Arjuna blew their conches. The Kuru army was afraid (VII, 88).—§ 599: THE FOURTEENTH DAY'S BATTLE. Arjuna & Durmarshaṇa; a terrible carnage was caused by Arjuna; Durmarshaṇa's division fled away (VII, 89). Duḥçāsana & Arjuna; Duḥçāsana's division was slaughtered and routed; he sought protection with Droṇa (VII, 90). Arjuna met with Droṇa and prayed for leave to slay Jayadratha; Droṇa refused leave and attacked Arjuna; unable to vanquish Droṇa, Arjuna avoided him from fear of losing time, and penetrated into the Kuru army, the Pāñcāla princes, Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas, being the protectors of his wheels; Jaya, etc. (α), opposed Arjuna, and so did the Abhīshāhas, etc. (β), with Droṇa at their head (VII, 91). Droṇa & Arjuna, who employed the Brāhma weapon. Arjuna avoided Droṇa, began to slaughter the Bhojas, and took up his position between Kṛtavarman and the Kāmboja king Sudakshiṇa. Arjuna & Kṛtavarman, who was stupefied; Arjuna proceeded to the division of the Kāmbojas. Kṛtavarman & Yudhāmanyu + Uttamaujas, who were prevented by Kṛtavarman from following Arjuna, who did not slay Kṛtavarman. Çrutāyudha (b) & Arjuna (+ Kṛshṇa); Çrutāyudha attacked Kṛshṇa with his mace, which returned and slew Çrutāyudha himself; all the troops fled away. The Kāmboja king Sudakshiṇa & Arjuna, who slew him; all the troops fled away (VII, 92). Arjuna slew the Abhīshāhas, etc. (γ). Çrutāyus + Acyutāyus & Arjuna, who slew them both with the Aindra weapon. Niyatāyus + Dīrghāyus (the sons of Çrutāyus and Acyutāyus) & Arjuna, who slew them both. The Aṅgas (on elephants) + the Kaliṅga king, etc. (on elephants; urged by Duryodhana), & Arjuna, who caused a great carnage among them, as also among the Mlecchas, Yavanas, etc. (δ). The Ambastha king Çrutāyus & Arjuna (+ Kṛshṇa), who slew him (VII, 93). Duryodhana addressed Droṇa in wrath and affection. Droṇa acknowledged his inability to oppose Arjuna on account of his own old age. Droṇa cased Duryodhana in invulnerable armour (invoking the Vedas, Nahusha, etc. (ε)) and urged him to oppose Arjuna; with this armour he need have no fear from As., D., Y., U., Rā., men, etc. It was the armour that Çiva had given to Indra, by means of which he slew Vṛtra (c); Indra > Aṅgiras > Bṛhaspati > Agniveçya > Droṇa. It was put on, its pieces being joined with Brāhma strings. Brahmán had himself put it on Vishṇu in days of yore, and on Indra in the fight about Tārakā. Duryodhana + Trigartas, etc., proceeded towards the chariot of Arjuna (VII, 94). The Pāṇḍavas (headed by Dhṛshṭadyumna) + Somakas & Droṇa; a fierce battle ensued in front of the Kuru array; Droṇa & Dhṛshṭadyumna; Droṇa's host became divided into three bodies: one which retreated towards Kṛtavarman, another towards Jalasandha, another towards Droṇa himself; Viviṃçati, etc. (ζ), & Bhīmasena; king Bāhlīka & the Draupadeyas; the Govāsana chief Çaibya & the Kāçi king; the Madra king Çalya & Yudhishṭhira; Duḥçāsana & Sātyaki; Saṅjaya & Cekitāna; Çakuni (+ 700 Gāndhāras) & Sahadeva; Vinda and Anuvinda & Virāṭa; king Bāhlīka & Çikhaṇḍin; the Avanti chief + the Sauvīras and Prabhadrakas & Dhṛshṭadyumna; Alāyudha & Ghaṭotkaca; Kuntibhoja and Rā. Alambusha. Jayadratha remained in the rear, protected by Kṛpa, etc., and the protectors of his wheels were Açvatthāman on the right and Karṇa on the left; his rear was protected by Kṛpa, etc. (η), headed by Somadatta's son (VII, 95). Droṇa, in front of his array, fought the Pārthas. Vinda and Anuvinda & Virāṭa; Çikhaṇḍin & Bāhlīka; the Govāsana king Çaibya & the Kāçi king; the Bāhlīka king & the Draupadeyas; Duḥçāsana & Sātyaki; Kuntibhoja & Alambusha; Nakula and Sahadeva & Çakuni, who fled towards Droṇa; Rā. Ghaṭotkaca & Rā. Alāyudha; Yudhishṭhira & Çalya; Viviṃçati, etc. (θ), & Bhīmasena (VII, 96). Bhīmasena & Jalasandha; Yudhishṭhira & Kṛtavarman; Dhṛshṭadyumna & Droṇa; Dhṛshṭadyumna mounted Droṇa's chariot, had his pārshṇi charioteers slain, etc., but was rescued by Sātyaki; Droṇa & Sātyaki (VII, 97). Sātyaki (Yuyudhāna) & Droṇa; D. (headed by Brahmán and Soma), Si., Cā., Vd., M.-U. looked at; Droṇa acknowledged in Sātyaki the force of Rāma, etc. (ι); D. (with Indra), G., Si., and Cā. admired him; Droṇa invoked the Āgneya weapon, Sātyaki the Vāruṇa weapon. Just at that time the sun went down in his course. Yudhishṭhira, etc. (κ) (in order to protect Sātyaki), & Droṇa (protected by Duḥçāsana, etc.) (VII, 98). Arjuna and Kṛshṇa steadily proceeded towards Jayadratha (description). Vinda and Anuvinda & Arjuna, who slew them both. While Kṛshṇa groomed Arjuna's steeds, Arjuna on foot held the whole Kuru army in check, and piercing the earth with a weapon made a lake for his steeds to drink from, and an arrow hall for them to rest within; Nārada came to see the lake (VII, 99). The Si. and Cā., etc., applauded. The Kurus fiercely attacked Arjuna while he was on foot; Arjuna beat back all his assailants; the Kurus applauded his prowess, blaming Duryodhana. After finishing the grooming Kṛshṇa reharnessed the steeds and proceeded with great speed. Duryodhana followed (VII, 100). The progress of Arjuna (with Kṛshṇa) became irresistible. Duryodhana outran Arjuna in a single chariot, and then turned back, facing Kṛshṇa (VII, 101). Kṛshṇa pointed out Duryodhana to Arjuna and urged him to slay him ("the three worlds with D., As., and men cannot vanquish thee, what need be said of Duryodhana?"), mentioning Duryodhana's injuries (λ); Arjuna promised to slay him; Arjuna & Duryodhana (VII, 102). Arjuna failed to pierce Duryodhana in consequence of the latter's invulnerable armour; "the chief of the gods gave this invulnerable armour to Aṅgiras > Bṛhaspati > Indra > Arjuna." Arjuna shot strong arrows, strengthened by mantras, at Duryodhana, which were cut off by Açvatthāman; this weapon could not be used again lest it should slay Arjuna himself. Arjuna deprived Duryodhana of his chariot, and steeds, and weapons; when Kṛshṇa blew Pāñcajanya and Arjuna drew Gāṇḍīva, the Kurus fell down on the ground. The protectors of Jayadratha attacked Kṛshṇa and Arjuna (VII, 103). Bhūriçravas, etc. (μ) (with Saindhava horses, etc.), & Arjuna, who blew Devadatta, as Kṛshṇa blew Pāñcajanya; Duryodhana + Bhūriçravas, etc. (μ), & Arjuna; Açvatthāman & Arjuna (+ Kṛshṇa) (VII, 104). Sañjaya described to Dhṛtarāshṭra the standards (ν). Arjuna, assailed by many chariot-warriors, slew many of them (VII, 105). In the afternoon: The Pāñcālas and the Pāṇḍavas (desirous of slaying Droṇa) & the Kurus; Bṛhatkshattra (among the Kaikayas) & Droṇa; Kshemadhūrti & Bṛhatkshattra; Dhṛshṭaketu (the Cedi) & Kshemadhūrti; Vīradhanvan & Dhṛshṭaketu; Yudhishṭhira & Droṇa; Vikarṇa (Dhārtarāshṭra) & Nakula; Durmukha & Sahadeva; Vyāghradatta & Sātyaki; Bhūriçravas & the Draupadeyas; Rā. Alambusha (Ṛshyaçṛṅga's son) & Bhīmasena; Yudhishṭhira & Droṇa; Yudhishṭhira displayed great heroism; both he and Droṇa invoked the Brāhma weapon; Yudhishṭhira, in distress, getting upon the chariot of Sahadeva is borne away from the field (VII, 106). Kshemadhūrti & the Kaikaya prince Bṛhatkshattra, who slew Kshemadhūrti; Vīradhanvan & Dhṛshṭaketu (advancing against Droṇa); Si. and Cā. wondered; Vīradhanvan was slain by Dhṛshṭaketu; Durmukha (Dhārtarāshṭra) & Sahadeva; Durmukha mounted the chariot of Niramitra, who was slain by Sahadeva; Nakula & Vikarṇa (Dhārtarāshṭra), whom he vanquished; Vyāghradatta (Magadha prince) & Sātyaki, who slew him; the Magadhas & Sātyaki, who nearly exterminated them; the Kurus were routed; Droṇa & Sātyaki (VII, 107); Bhūriçravas & the Draupadeyas; Çatānīka (the son of Nakula), etc. (ξ), & Bhūriçravas, who was slain by the son of Sahadeva; Rā. Alambusha (son of Ṛshyaçṛṅga; recollecting the slaughter of his brother Baka) & Bhīmasena; Alambusha resorted to illusive tricks and caused a river of blood with Rā., etc., wafting away countless Cedis, etc. (ο); Bhīma employed the Tvāshṭra weapon; Alambusha fled to Droṇa (VII, 108). Ghaṭotkaca & Alambusha; both availed themselves of their illusive power; the Pāṇḍavas (Bhīmasena, etc.) & Alambusha; Bhīmasena's son, etc. (π), & do., who was slain by Ghaṭotkaca (VII, 109). Yuyudhāna & Droṇa; Yudhishṭhira urged Dhṛshṭadyumna and all his troops, headed by Bhīmasena, to rescue Yuyudhāna; Yudhishṭhira (with all his troops) & Droṇa, who slew many and vanquished the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ρ); Yudhishṭhira heard the sound of Pāñcajanya and thought Arjuna to be in distress; he requested Sātyaki to go to Arjuna and bring him news of his safety; Arjuna had said in the Dvaitavana to Yudhishṭhira, "even if Kṛshṇa, etc. (σ), assist us, I shall yet appoint Sātyaki for our aid, since there is none equal to him," and Yudhishṭhira had witnessed his reverence for Arjuna at Dvārakā when returning from the tīrthas, and at Upaplavya his affection for the Pāṇḍavas; "the day is about to end"; amongst the Vṛshṇis two were regarded as atirathas: Pradyumna and Sātyaki (in weapons equal to Nārāyaṇa, in strength to Saṅkarshaṇa, in bravery to Arjuna, surpassing Bhīshma and Droṇa) (VII, 110). Sātyaki hesitated to comply with Yudhishṭhira's request on the ground of the counter-commands of Arjuna ("only Pradyumna and Sātyaki are a match for Droṇa in battle"); "the Sauvīrakas, etc. (τ), D., As., men, Rā., K., M.-U., etc., are no match for Arjuna in battle." Yudhishṭhira pressed his request, saying that Bhīma, etc. (υ), will protect him during Sātyaki's absence (VII, 111). Sātyaki agreed to obey Yudhishṭhira; "the distance from here is three yojanas"; he would crush the elephants of the Añjana breed, mounted by Mlecchas (named Rukmarathas), commanded by Karṇa and devoted to Duḥçāsana, at Karṇa's command returning from the pursuit of Arjuna and waiting for Sātyaki, and also ordered by Duryodhana; he would also crush those 700 elephants ridden by Kirātas (sprung from the race of Agni) (c) and formerly given by the Kirāta king to Arjuna; obtaining these and Kṛpa, etc. (φ), Duryodhana thought lightly of the Pāṇḍavas; "also the Kāmbojas (a full akshauhiṇī) are on the alert with their eyes on me." Then Sātyaki directed his chariot to be properly equipped; "I shall also have to encounter the Çakas." Yudhishṭhira caused quivers, etc., to be placed on Sātyaki's chariot (with steeds of the Sindhu breed); then Sātyaki set out (description) with his charioteer and friend, the younger brother of Dāruka. Bhīmasena also set out with Sātyaki, but was prevailed upon by Sātyaki to return and protect Yudhishṭhira (VII, 112). Yudhishṭhira followed Sātyaki in order to reach the chariot of Droṇa. Dhṛshṭadyumna and king Vasudāna urged the warriors to protect Sātyaki. Sātyaki made the Kurus flee away. Droṇa & Sātyaki, who then, like Arjuna, avoided Droṇa, pointing out to his charioteer the Avantis, etc. (χ), and then smiting the great host of Karṇa. Kṛtavarman & Sātyaki, who slew Kṛtavarman's charioteer and issued out of the Bhoja division, while Kṛtavarman (himself urging his steeds) attacked Bhīmasena. Yuyudhāna & the Kāmbojas. Droṇa (making the Bhoja king protect his troops) pursued Yuyudhāna, while the Pāṇḍava host began to resist him. The Pāñcālas (headed by Bhīmasena) & Kṛtavarman (VII, 113). Dhṛtarāshṭra wondered before Sañjaya that even such an army as his should be slain ("it must be Destiny"), and asked about what passed. Sañjaya, quoting Vidura, rebuked Dhṛtarāshṭra, and then related: the Pārthas (ψ) (headed by Bhīmasena) & the Bhoja king Kṛtavarman; Çikhaṇḍin was brought away from the battle by his charioteer; Kṛtavarman vanquished all the Pārthas, etc. (ω) (VII, 114). Sātyaki turned back to check Kṛtavarman, whom he deprived of his chariot; then he broke the hostile division and proceeded on his way. Sātyaki & Rukmaratha (with the Trigartas and elephants, to the left of Droṇa's host; urged by Duryodhana they waited for Sātyaki); this elephant division fled away. The Magadha king Jalasandha (on an elephant) & Yuyudhāna (with white steeds), who slew him; the Kurus fled away. Droṇa & Yuyudhāna (VII, 115). Droṇa, etc. (αα) & Yuyudhāna; Duryodhana fled away, mounting the chariot of Citrasena. Kṛtavarman & Yuyudhāna, who made him fall on his knees (VII, 116). Droṇa & Sātyaki, whose driver swooned away; Sātyaki, acting as his own driver, continued to fight with Droṇa, who was carried away by his steeds; the troops broke. Droṇa returned to the front of the array in order to check the Pāṇḍavas (VII, 117). King Sudarçana & Sātyaki, who slew him (VII, 118). Sātyaki's driver pronounced an eulogy (ββ) upon him. Sātyaki urged him to take him to the Kāmbojas; Yuyudhāna & the Yavanas, who fled away; thousands of Kāmbojas, etc. (γγ), were similarly slain by Sātyaki; Cā. and G. applauded him (VII, 119). Yuyudhāna proceeded towards Arjuna; Duryodhana, etc. (δδ), followed him behind and attacked him as he proceeded slowly; an awful carnage set in; Duryodhana's chariot was taken away by the steeds; the others then fled away. Yuyudhāna proceeded towards the chariot of Arjuna (VII, 120). Dhṛtarāshṭra wondered before Sañjaya at the feats of Yuyudhāna ("I think Destiny is now unpropitious"). Sañjaya blamed Dhṛtarāshṭra and Duryodhana, and then continued his narrative. At the command of Duryodhana the Saṃçaptakas rallying, with a number of Çakas, etc. (εε) (headed by Duryodhana), attacked Sātyaki; Duḥçāsana (with a large force of robbers) & Sātyaki; many elephants of the race of Añjana, etc. (ζζ), were slain, and many steeds of the Vanāyu race, etc. (ηη), and many thousands of warriors; many Daradas & Sātyaki; they fled away. Droṇa, hearing the noise, told his charioteer to take the chariot to the spot where Yuyudhāna was; the charioteer remarked that the Pāñcālas and Pāṇḍavas were rushing against Droṇa; suddenly Sātyaki appeared, and the broken troops and Duḥçāsana, all struck with panic, rushed towards Droṇa's division (VII, 121). Droṇa rebuked Duḥçāsana for his cowardice (quoting his words to Draupadī), and told him to make peace with the Pāṇḍavas (θθ). Duḥçāsana (with Mlecchas) & Sātyaki. Droṇa & the Pāñcālas + the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ιι); Droṇa slew the Pāñçāla prince Vīraketu, and his brothers Citraketu, Sudhanvan, Citravarman, and Citraratha; Dhṛshṭadyumna mounted Droṇa's chariot, but was then carried away by his own steeds; having caused a great carnage Droṇa once more took up his station in the midst of his own array (VII, 122). Duḥçāsana & Sātyaki; the warriors of Duḥçāsana (but not himself) fled away. Duryodhana urged a body of 3,000 Trigartas towards Yuyudhāna, who slew 500; then they turned towards Droṇa. While Sātyaki was proceeding towards Arjuna he was again attacked by Duḥçāsana, who was taken up by the Trigarta leader on his chariot; Sātyaki did not slay him, recollecting the words of Bhīmasena, but quickly proceeded along the track of Arjuna (VII, 123). D. and Cā. wondered. Bhīmasena, etc. (κκ), & the Kauravas. Sātyaki proceeded towards Arjuna. Duryodhana & the Pāṇḍavas (λλ); Duryodhana caused a great carnage. Droṇa (in order to rescue Duryodhana) & the Pāñcālas; a dreadful carnage took place. Then there arose a loud uproar from the place where Arjuna was (VII, 124). In the afternoon: Droṇa & the Somakas (and Pāṇḍavas); Bṛhatkshattra (of the Kekayas) & Droṇa; both invoked the Brāhma weapon; Bṛhatkshattra was slain by Droṇa, who then slew the Cedi Dhṛshṭaketu (the son of Çiçupāla; with steeds of the Kāmboja breed), and then Dhṛshtaketu's son, and the son of Jarāsandha. The Cedis, etc. (μμ), & Droṇa, who slew them, especially the foremost among the Cedis. The Pāñcālas began to tremble and loudly called for Bhīmasena and Dhṛshṭadyumna. Droṇa slew Kshatradharman (Dhṛshṭadyumna's son), and caused Cekitāna to be carried away by his steeds. Drupada (censuring Duryodhana) (placing the Pārthas at his head) & Droṇa (then 85 years of age, with white locks, but behaving like a youth of 16) (VII, 125). Yudhishṭhira was anxious at not having obtained any intelligence of Arjuna and Sātyaki, and thought of sending Bhīma after Sātyaki, asking him to send him a message by uttering a leonine roar (VII, 126). Bhīma requested Dhṛshṭadyumna to protect Yudhishṭhira, and prepared to set out (description) after Sātyaki and Arjuna; the fierce blasts of Pāñcajanya were heard, filling Yudhishṭhira with fear. Bhīma (with his charioteer Viçoka) broke through the head of the Kuru array; the Pāñcālas and Somakas followed him behind; the brothers Duḥçala, etc. (νν), (with celestial weapons) he passed, and rushed against Droṇa's division; Droṇa & Bhīmasena; Bhīma's mace pressed Droṇa's chariot down into the earth; Droṇa, who had previously alighted, was saved; Bhīma slew eleven sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra: Kuṇḍabhedin, etc. (ξξ); Dhṛtarāshṭra's sons and the soldiers fled away. Bhīmasena then passed towards the division of Droṇa (VII, 127). Bhīma & Droṇa; Bhīma passing through the Bhoja, etc. (οο), division and beholding Sātyaki, proceeded with great speed and sighted Arjuna, to whom he made his presence known by a roar; Arjuna and Kṛshṇa uttered loud roars in return; Yudhishṭhira understood that all was safe, and thought of Arjuna's feats (ππ) (VII, 128). Karṇa & Bhīmasena; Karṇa mounted the chariot of Vṛshasena; Bhīma uttered a loud roar that gratified Yudhishṭhira. Arjuna stretched Gāṇḍīva and Kṛshṇa blew Pāñcajanya (VII, 129). Duryodhana saw Droṇa, and affectionately chided him for his having allowed Sātyaki and Bhīma to penetrate the Kuru host and approach to the aid of Arjuna. Droṇa counselled Duryodhana to make effective arrangements for the protection of Jayadratha. While going back towards Jayadratha, Duryodhana encountered the two brothers, the Pāñcāla princes, Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas, the protectors of the wheels of Arjuna's chariot, who had formerly, while Arjuna penetrated the Kuru host, been checked in their progress by Kṛtavarman, and were now proceeding towards Arjuna by the flank of the Kuru army. Uttamaujas ascended the chariot of Yudhāmanyu, which Duryodhana pressed down into the earth with his mace, and then Duryodhana ascended the chariot of the Madra king; Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas, ascending two other chariots, proceeded towards Arjuna (VII, 130). Karṇa proceeded against Bhīma. Dhṛtarāshṭra inquired about the battle (ρρ). Sañjaya related: Bhīma desired to avoid Karṇa and to proceed towards Arjuna; Karṇa insultingly challenged Bhīma, who turned back and encountered Karṇa; a fierce battle ensued between Bhīma and Karṇa, whom Bhīma deprived of his steeds and chariot. Karṇa mounted another chariot (VII, 131). Continuation of the battle between Karṇa and Bhīma, who recollected the woes in Virāṭa's city, etc. (σσ). Bhīma's horses of the hue of bears and Karṇa's of the hue of swans mingled together; Kṛshṇa and Arjuna became anxious for Bhīma; a great carnage took place (VII, 132). Dhṛtarāshṭra's eulogy on Bhīma (ττ); Karṇa was capable of encountering D., As., and men. Sañjaya continued: Bhīma again deprived Karṇa of his steeds and driver. Duryodhana dispatched his brother Durjaya to rescue Karṇa; Bhīma slew Durjaya; Karṇa wept (VII, 133). Riding upon another chariot Karṇa again encountered Bhīma, who again deprived him of his chariot. Duryodhana dispatched his brother

Durmukha to rescue Karṇa; Bhīma slew Durmukha, upon whose chariot Karṇa mounted, weeping; Karṇa fled, carried away by his steeds (VII, 134). Dhṛtarāshṭra's observations on Bhīma's victory over Karṇa (νν); "I think Destiny reigns supreme." Sañjaya called Dhṛtarāshṭra "the root of this destruction of the world"; then he related: five brothers of Duryodhana (φφ) + Karṇa & Bhīmasena, who slew the five brothers, resisting Karṇa the while (VII, 135). Karṇa became despondent of his life; Bhīma again deprived Karṇa of his steeds, driver, and bow; Karṇa once more fled on foot; Duryodhana dispatched other brothers of his against Bhīma, who slew them all (χχ). Karṇa wept, recollecting the words of Vidura; then, riding upon another chariot he encountered Bhīma (description), who gladdened Arjuna, etc. (ψψ) (VII, 136). Karṇa sorrowfully surveyed the slain brothers of Duryodhana, and was hard pressed by Bhīma, who was applauded by Cā., Bhūriçravas, etc. (ωω); Duryodhana dispatched seven of his brothers to the rescue of Karṇa; they were all slain by Bhīma (aaa); Bhīma lamented the death of Vikarṇa, who was dear to him. Then he with a shout gladdened Yudhishṭhira, who rushed against Droṇa. Beholding the slaughter of thirty-one of his brothers by Bhīma, Duryodhana recollected the words of Vidura (βββ) (VII, 137). Bhīma & Karṇa; a great carnage was caused by both (Sindhus, Sauvīras, Kauravas); Cā. and Si. were amazed (VII, 138). Continuation: D-ṛ., Si., G., and Vd. applauded the two combatants. Pierced by Karṇa, Bhīma's driver sought refuge in Sātyaki's chariot; Karṇa cut off Bhīma's weapons; Bhīma leaped into the sky in order to snatch Karṇa off his chariot; Karṇa concealed himself on his vehicle; the Kurus and Cā. applauded Bhīma; Bhīma's weapons being exhausted he fled away from Karṇa and defended himself with the bodies of the elephants slain by Arjuna; but, recollecting Arjuna's vow, he did not take the life of Karṇa; and Karṇa, recollecting his promise to Kuntī, did not take the life of Bhīma, whom he touched with the end of his bow and insulted with his speech. Arjuna then forced Karṇa to fly, and speeded a terrible shaft after him when he was retreating, which was cut off by Açvatthāman, whom Arjuna then forced to flee away (VII, 139). Dhṛtarāshṭra lamented (γγγ). Sañjaya related: Sātyaki followed Bhīma; Alambusha (rājavaro, v. †5828) & Sātyaki, who slew him (!), and then proceeded, with his steeds of the Sindhu breed, towards Arjuna; Duḥçāsana and the Dhārtarāshṭras & Sātyaki, who slew the steeds of Duḥçāsana, gladdening Arjuna and Kṛshṇa (VII, 140). Fifty Trigarta princes & Sātyaki, who made them flee away, and then, passing through the Çūrasenas and Kaliṅgas, approached Arjuna, and was eulogized (δδδ) by Kṛshṇa. Arjuna was not pleased with the arrival of Sātyaki on account of his anxiety for Yudhishṭhira (εεε) (VII, 141). Bhūriçravas & Sātyaki; they mutually addressed (ζζζ) and challenged each other, whereafter the fight began; each deprived the other of his chariot, then they fought with swords, then with fists and hands (descriptions); Kṛshṇa urged Arjuna to protect the tired Sātyaki against Bhūriçravas, who was fresh; Sātyaki succumbed to Bhūriçravas; Arjuna cut off one of the arms of Bhūriçravas (VII, 142). Bhūriçravas rebuked Arjuna for his unrighteous feat (ηηη); Arjuna justified his conduct (θθθ). Bhūriçravas (b), abandoning Yuyudhāna, desired to die in prāya (description); he acknowledged the justice of Arjuna's plea, and was blessed by Arjuna and Kṛshṇa (ιιι). Though forbidden by Kṛshṇa, etc. (κκκ), Sātyaki slew Bhūriçravas sitting in prāya. The warriors did not applaud Sātyaki; Si., Cā., men, and D. applauded Bhūriçravas; the soldiers thought that it had been ordained by the Creator that it should be so. Sātyaki justified his conduct (λλλ), quoting Vālmīki (VII, 143). Dhṛtarāshṭra asked Sañjaya how Sātyaki could be humiliated by Bhūriçravas. Sañjaya related the history of Çini (e) and of Somadatta, and praised the Vṛshṇi heroes, vanquishers of the very D., Dā., G., As., Y., U., and Rā. (VII, 144). Arjuna proceeded to Jayadratha's chariot. Duryodhana, etc. (μμμ) & Arjuna (μμμ). Duryodhana prevailed upon Karṇa to protect Jayadratha (νννν); Karṇa promised to do his best (ξξξ); Duryodhana, etc. (ooo) (also Açvatthāman) (f) & Arjuna (+ Bhīmasena and Yuyudhāna); Si., Cā., and Pn. applauded Karṇa and Arjuna. Arjuna deprived Karṇa of his steeds, chariot, and driver. Açvatthāman made Karṇa ride on his chariot. Arjuna invoked the Vāruṇa weapon; he caused a great carnage (VII, 145). Arjuna employed the Aindra weapon, etc. (description). Arjuna & Jayadratha (+ ooo); Arjuna cut off Jayadratha's standard and slew his driver; Jayadratha was placed by six chariot warriors in their midst. Kṛshṇa covered the sun by means of his yoga power, so that all, except Arjuna, thought the sun to have set, and he urged Arjuna to cut off Jayadratha's head without delay; Arjuna caused such a carnage that the warriors abandoned Jayadratha in fear and fled away; Kṛshṇa again urged Arjuna to cut off Jayadratha's head without delay, telling him of Jayadratha's father Vṛddhakshatra (g), who was still engaged in penances outside Samantapañcaka; Arjuna should make the head fall upon the lap of Vṛddhakshatra himself, lest his own head should crack in 100 pieces; this Arjuna did, and as the head fell down from Vṛddhakshatra's lap the latter's head split into 100 pieces. Kṛshṇa then withdrew the darkness created by him; Kṛshṇa and Arjuna blew their conches, and Bhīma, by a tremendous shout, communicated to Yudhishṭhira the message of victory. Yudhishṭhira & Droṇa, after the sun had set; and Arjuna fought with many mighty chariot warriors (VII, 146). Kṛpa + Açvatthāman & Arjuna; Kṛpa was carried away by his driver, and Açvatthāman fled. Arjuna, grieved at Kṛpa's death-like swoon (πππ), Karṇa & Arjuna + Sātyaki + the two Pāñcāla princes (Arjuna's wheel protectors). Kṛshṇa told Arjuna to avoid Karṇa because the latter had yet the lance that Indra had given him. Karṇa & Sātyaki (upon Kṛshṇa's chariot with Dāruka and the horses Çaibya, etc. (ρρρ), Kṛshṇa having known before the encounter that Sātyaki would be deprived of his chariot by Bhūriçravas, and having therefore ordered Dāruka to let his chariot be equipped the next day, and now calling Dāruka by blowing his conch in the Ṛshabha note; neither D., G., Y., U., Rā., nor men could conquer the two Kṛshṇas; D. with Brahmán and Si. knew their prowess); Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas (abandoning Arjuna's chariot) & Karṇa; such a battle had never been heard of even between D., G., As., U., or Rā.; D., G., and Dā. looked at; Sātyaki slew Karṇa's charioteer and steeds. Vṛshasena, etc. (σσσ), & Sātyaki. Karṇa ascended the chariot of Duryodhana. Sātyaki did not slay the Dhārtarāshṭras (Duḥçāsana, etc.) on account of the vow of Bhīmasena. Açvatthāman, Kṛtavarman, etc., were all vanquished by Sātyaki with only one bow; "in this world there are only three mighty bowmen: Kṛshṇa, Arjuna, and Sātyaki," said Sañjaya. The younger brother of Dāruka soon brought another chariot (description) to Sātyaki; Sātyaki ascended it, and Dāruka went to Kṛshṇa. A new chariot was brought for Karṇa also. Sañjaya told Dhṛtarāshṭra that thirty-one of his sons had been slain by Bhīmasena, etc. (τττ) (VII, 147). Insulted by Karṇa, Bhīma addressed Arjuna in order to induce the latter to permit him to slay Karṇa; Arjuna rebuked Karṇa (ννν), and vowed to slay his son Vṛshasena in his presence. Kṛshṇa congratulated Arjuna (φφφ), who attributed the victory to Kṛshṇa; Kṛshṇa pointed out to Arjuna the results of that day's battle; then he blew Pāñcajanya and went and informed Yudhishṭhira (VII, 148). Kṛshṇa congratulated Yudhishṭhira, who attributed the success to Kṛshṇa's grace (χχχ); Kṛshṇa and Arjuna once more congratulated him (ψψψ); then Bhīma and Sātyaki, whom Yudhishṭhira congratulated (ωωω) and embraced (VII, 149). Duryodhana's despondency (α') and cheerless address to Droṇa (β'), whom he censured for treating Arjuna leniently; "it seems that Karṇa only now wishes us victory" (VII, 150). Droṇa's reply to Duryodhana (γ'); he vowed to slay all the Pāñcālas before doffing his armour; he asked Duryodhana to tell Açvatthāman to avenge himself on the Somakas, etc., even at the risk of his life. Then he proceeded against the Pāṇḍavas (VII, 151). Duryodhana communicated to Karṇa his suspicions about Droṇa's sincerity (δ'); Karṇa removed Duryodhana's suspicions of Droṇa (ε'), and attributed the ill-success of the Kurus to destiny. Meanwhile the Pāṇḍava divisions appeared for battle, and a fierce battle ensued (VII, 152).

Jayadrathavimokshaṇa(ṃ) ("the setting free of Jayadratha"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 325 (i.e. Jayadrathavimokshaṇaparvan).

[Jayadrathavimokshaṇaparvan] ("the setting free of Jayadratha," the 47th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). (Cf. Jayadrathavimokshaṇa.) § 523 (cf. Draupadīhar.): Bhīma seized Jayadratha by the hair, and holding him high up in the air thrust him on the ground, etc., and regretted that Yudhishṭhira had forbidden to kill him. He then with his arrow shaved Jayadratha's head, leaving only five tufts of hair, and made him promise to say in public assemblies, "I am the slave of the Pāṇḍavas." They then bound him and thrust him into the chariot; then they drove towards the hermitage and presented him to Yudhishṭhira. Yudhishṭhira and Draupadī set him free with his army. § 524: Jayadratha went to Gaṅgādvāra, and pleased Çiva so that he deigned to accept his offerings in person and granted him a boon. Jayadratha asked that he might be able to defeat in battle all the five Pāṇḍavas on their chariots. This Çiva declared to be impossible, as Arjuna (b) was invincible, and was protected by Kṛshṇa, who was Vishṇu (c). Çiva then briefly reminded Jayadratha of four incarnations of Vishṇu (d). "Thou shalt, however, be able to vanquish for a single day only the rest of Yudhishṭhira's forces and the four Pāṇḍavas, but not Arjuna." Then Çiva vanished with Umā, Jayadratha returned home, and the Pāṇḍavas continued to dwell in Kāmyaka (III, 272).

[Jvarotpatti(ḥ)] ("the origin of fever"). § 694*b* (Mokshadh.): Bhīshma said: In days of yore there was a summit of Meru, named Jyotishka, belonging to Savitṛ (Sāvitraṃ). There Çiva used to sit with Pārvatī, waited upon by D., V., etc. (a). After some time the Prajāpati Daksha commenced to perform a sacrifice, whither all the gods headed by Indra, with the permission of Çiva, repaired mounted on their chariots, proceeding to that spot whence the Gaṅgā is said to issue. Pārvatī asked why Çiva did not himself proceed thither, and was told that in days of yore the deities made an arrangement in consequence of which no share was assigned to Çiva of offerings in sacrifices. He was filled with grief. Çiva ordered Nandin to wait there, and summoning all his yoga force, he, with all his terrible followers, came and destroyed that sacrifice (description); it assumed the form of a deer and tried to fly away through the skies, pursued by Çiva with bow and arrow. A drop of sweat fell from his forehead down on the earth; there appeared a terrible fire, whence issued a dreadful being of very short stature, etc. (description), who consumed the embodied form of sacrifice and then attacked D. and R., who fled in all directions. The earth began to tremble, etc. Brahmán appeased Çiva by promising him a share of the sacrificial offerings; the being that had sprung from his sweat should be distributed among all creatures as fever (description of the distribution). Kaca, a brahman, the son of Bṛhaspati. § 145 (Sambhavap.): Janamejaya said: How did Yayāti get Devayānī? Vaiçampāyana related: In the many battles between the gods and the Asuras, the gods had for their purohita Bṛhaspati Āṅgirasa, and the Asuras Uçanas Kāvya (i.e. Çukra). As Uçanas, by his science Sañjīvinī, restored the fallen Dānavas to life, and Bṛhaspati was unable to revive the fallen gods, the gods prevailed upon Bṛhaspati's son Kaca to repair to Uçanas and conciliate him and his daughter Devayānī and learn the Sañjīvinī. K. then repaired to the capital of Vṛshaparvan, the king of the Dānavas, and promising to practise brahmacarya for 1,000 years he was accepted by Uçanas as his pupil. Young as he was he, by singing and dancing and playing on instruments, etc., soon gratified Devayānī. After 500 years the Dānavas, having discovered who he was, slew him, and one time hacked his body to pieces and gave it to wolves and jackals, another time they pounded it into paste and mixed it with the waters of the ocean, but both times Devayānī prevailed upon Uçanas to restore K. to life by the Sañjīvinī, summoning him and saying, "Come." Then slaying him for the third time they burned the body and mixed the ashes with the wine (surā) which Uçanas drank. As Devayānī again asked her father to revive K., Uçanas said: "It is of no use, as he is always killed again; thou art always worshipped by the Bráhman (i.e. the Veda, Nīl.), the brahmans, the gods including Indra, the Vasus, the Açvins, the enemies of the gods and the whole world, therefore do not grieve for a mortal." As Devayānī said she would starve, Çukra imparted the Sañjīvinī to K., who, though reduced to powder, remembered everything. K. then came out, ripping open the stomach of Çukra and then revived Çukra by the Sañjīvinī. Uçanas declared that henceforth that brahman who would drink wine should be reckoned to have committed the sin of slaying a brahman. K. stayed with Çukra for 1,000 years (I, 76). When K. was about to return to the gods Devayānī asked him to become her husband, and as he refused (saying that she was a sister to him) she cursed him, saying that his science should bear no fruit. K. again cursed Devayānī, saying that no ṛshi's son should take her hand, and that his science should bear fruit, if not to himself, at least to him to whom he might impart it. Then he went to the abode of Indra, and the gods declared that he should become a sharer with them in sacrificial offerings (I, 77): I, 76, 3199 (jyeshṭhaṃ putraṃ Bṛhaspateḥ), 3199 (Bṛhaspatisutaḥ), 3201 (ṛsher Aṅgirasaḥ pautraṃ putraṃ sākshād Bṛhaspateḥ), 3203, 3204, 3209, 3212, 3213, 3214, 3215, 3216, 3219 (Bṛhaspatisutaḥ), 3223, 3226, 3227, 3228 (Bṛhaspateḥ sutaḥ), †3232, (†3237), †3239, †3240, †3241, †3244, †3245, †3248, †3253, 3255; 77, (3261), 3265, (3267), 3271, (3272), 3276, 3277.—§ 146 (Devayānī): I, 78, 3279; 80, 3335 (Āṅgirasaṃ, all. to § 145).—§ 637 (Rājadh.): XII, 47η, 1596 (among the ṛshis who surrounded Bhīshma.)—§ 734 (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 26a*, 1765 (do.). Kairātaparvan ("the section treating of the Kirāta"), the 33rd of the minor parvans of Mhbhr., forming an episode to Arjuna's journey to the abode of Indra (cf. Kairāta). § 331. It is anew related how Arjuna set out from the Kāmyaka wood towards the north; he entered a terrible forest (description), resorted to by Siddhas and Cāraṇas, and then proceeded to the Himavat (description). For four months he practised austerities (specified), until the ṛshis made representations about it to Çiva, who dismissed them after having removed their fears (III, 38). Then Çiva with his bow and arrows, in the guise of a Kirāta, accompanied by Umā in the guise of a Kirāta woman, by merry spirits (bhūtaiḥ), and thousands of women, approached Arjuna as he was about to kill Mūka, a son of Danu, who in the form of a boar would have killed Arjuna. Arjuna and Çiva at the same time pierced Mūka with their arrows, and killed him; when dying he again assumed his rākshasa form; then they fought against each other, first with arrows, then with the very bows, then with swords, then with trees and stones, then with the fists, and then by clasping each other; at last Arjuna lost his senses, and was almost reduced to a ball of flesh; when he regained consciousness he made a clay image of Çiva, which he worshipped with a garland, which then appeared on the head of the Kirāta; he thus learned that it was Çiva, and prostrated himself at his feet. Çiva declared that Arjuna's prowess was equal to his own, promised to give him his weapon, and gave him 'eye' (cakshus), so that he beheld him in his true form, together with Umā.—§ 332: Arjuna then fell on his knees and worshipped him, saying: "O Kapardin! etc." (v. Mahādevastava) (III, 39).—§ 333: Çiva said that Arjuna (b) was in a former life Nara, etc. When granted a boon, Arjuna asked Çiva to give him the Pāçupata weapon named Brahmaçiras (c). Having purified himself he was instructed in its use on the condition that he should not hurl it against a human being, for then it would destroy the universe. The earth trembled, etc. The gods and Dānavas beheld the weapon in its bodily shape standing by the side of Arjuna. When Arjuna had been touched by Çiva, all that was evil in his body was dispelled. Having said to Arjuna, "Go thou into heaven," Çiva went up into the skies accompanied by Umā (III, 40).—§ 334: Then Arjuna was on the Himavat visited by the Lokapālas, viz., Varuṇa (blue as lapis lazuli), together with rivers, Nāgas, Daityas, and Sādhyas; Kubera, who dwells on Kailāsa, golden-coloured (jāmbūnadavapuḥ), accompanied by Yakshas; Yama, with staff in hand (daṇḍapāṇiḥ), illuminating the three worlds, and the Guhyakas, Gandharvas, and Nagās, accompanied by those lords of the creation (lokabhāvanaiḥ) the Pitṛs; further Çakra, with Māhendrāṇī, mounted on the neck of Airāvata, and surrounded by the gods, and eulogized by Gandharvas and ṛshis. Each of them occupied a particular summit of Himavat (Yama to the south, Varuṇa to the west). They granted him 'sight' (dṛshṭi), that he might see them. Yama said that Arjuna would defeat the Nivātakavacas, etc., and gave him his irresistible staff (daṇḍa) as a weapon. Varuṇa (b) gave him his irresistible nooses. Kubera said that in bygone kalpas Arjuna had always gone through ascetic austerities along with them, and gave him his favourite weapon Antardhāna (c). Indra said he would descend to earth in his chariot with Mātali as his charioteer, and taking him to heaven grant him all his celestial weapons (III, 41).

This is said in the Purāṇa (praised by the ṛshis) which is narrated by Vāyu: III, 190, 13101 (°ī Vishṇuyaçā nāma); 191, 13111 (°ī B., C. has °iḥ).—§ 717*b* (Nārāyaṇīya): XII, 340, 12968 (the tenth avatāra of Vishṇu).

Kalmāsha, a serpent. § 47 (Sarpanāmak.): I, 35, 1552 (°Çabalau, enumeration).

Kalmāshapāda, Saudāsa (also named Mitrasaha), king of Ayodhyā and husband of Madayantī. § 188 (Madayantī): I, 122, 4737 (being himself unable to beget children K. urged Madayantī to go to Vasishṭha, who begat Açmaka on her, cf. § 225).—§ 224 (Vāsishṭha): The rājarshi of the race of Ikshvāku Kalmāshapāda (whose sacrifices Viçvāmitra had desired to perform) once when hunting met the viprarshi Çaktri, the eldest of Vasishṭha's 100 sons, and ordered him to stand out of his way, and as Çaktri did not yield K. struck him with his whip. Çaktri then cursed him, saying: "From this day thou shalt be a rākshasa, eating human flesh." The king began humbly to propitiate the ṛshi, but Viçvāmitra (between whom and Vasishṭha there was a dispute about K., whom they both wanted as their yājya) passed before them without being seen, and caused a rākshasa named Kiṅkara to enter the king. Viçvāmitra then went away. At this time a hungry brahman beheld in the wood K., who was terribly afflicted by the rākshasa, and asked the king for some food with meat. K. asked him to stay there for a moment, and having roved for some time at pleasure at last entered his inner apartments. When waking at midnight and remembering his promise, he summoned his cook, and as the cook did not find any meat K. said: "Feed him with human flesh." The cook then took human flesh from the place where the executioners were, and offered it to the hungry brahman. Seeing with his spiritual power of vision (siddha-cakshushā) what kind of food it was, the brahman in anger said that the king himself should take a fancy to such food and wander over all the earth alarming all creatures. The curse on the king, being thus repeated a second time, became very strong, and possessed by the rākshasa the king lost all his senses. A while after K., beholding Çaktri, in order to revenge himself for the curse slew him and ate him up. And Viçvāmitra caused that rākshasa also to devour the other sons of Vasishṭha: I, 176, 6696 (Ikshvākuvaṃçajaḥ), [6720 (Mitrasahaḥ B., C. has mitrasahaṃ as adj. to dvijaṃ)].—§ 225 (Vāsishṭha): I, 177, 6761, 6768 (Vasishṭha delivered K. from the curse of Çaktri, and then at the request of K. begat Açmaka on Madayantī, the queen of K.).—§ 228 (Aurvop.): I, 181, 6881 (attained to heaven).—§ 229 (Vasishṭhop.): I, 182, 6888, 6904 (rājarshiṃ, it is related why K. caused Vasishṭha to beget a son on his wife).—[§ 480 (Pativratop., Brāhmaṇavyādhasaṃv.): III, 208, 13817 (Saudāsena, all. to § 224).]—§ 607 (Karṇap.): VIII, 45, 2092 (Rākshasaḥ, a sentence of his is quoted; read with B. K°aḥ sarasi, instead of K°asarasi).—[§ 638*b* (Rāmopākhyāna): XII, 49, 1792 (*dāyādaḥ Saudāsasya . . . [Kapota-lubdhaka-saṃvāda(ḥ)] ("the conversation between the dove and the fowler"). § 651*b* (Āpaddh.): Bhārgava related: A cruel fowler (description) was surprised in the forest by a great storm (description); the paths of the forest were all submerged; he caught a she-pigeon and immured her in a cage; when the sky cleared he passed the night under a tree, having bowed down to the deities that had this tree for their resort (XII, 143). In one of the branches of that tree the male pigeon lamented the loss of his wife (XII, 144). The she-pigeon answered him from within the hunter's cage, telling him to do the duties of hospitality to the fowler (XII, 145). The male pigeon welcomed the fowler, who was stiff with cold, by igniting a fire; as the fowler was hungry, the pigeon (quoting Ṛ., D., and P.) himself entered the fire, at which the fowler became terrified, thinking of his own cruel life (XII, 146), expressed his repentance, and set at liberty the she-pigeon, etc. (XII, 147). The she-pigeon lamented for the death of her spouse; then she threw herself into the blazing fire; the couple of pigeons ascended to heaven (XII, 148). The fowler took to rigid penances, perished in a forest conflagration, and beheld himself in heaven in splendour like Indra among Y. and G. and Si. (XII, 149).

He grew very strong and soon mastered the vedāṅgas; there was nothing he would not give to the brahmans. In order to benefit Arjuna, Indra in the guise of a brahman obtained his ear-rings and armour, and in return gave him a lance with which he could slay any one amongst gods, Asuras, men, Gandharvas, and Rākshasas. Because he took off (utkṛtya) his natural armour and ear-rings he was called Vaikartana Karṇa. He was the friend and counsellor of Duryodhana: I, 66, [2776 (Vasuṣheṇeti . . . viçrutaṃ)], 2780, 2782 (Vaikartanaḥ), 2783.—§ 175 (Karṇasambhava): I, 111, 4399, 4408, 4411 (Vaikartanaḥ; repetition of § 131).—§ 197 (Bhīmasena-rasapāna): I, 129, 5068.—[§ 203 (Droṇa): I, 132, 5221 (Sūtaputraç ca Rādheyaḥ, became the disciple of Droṇa in the Dhanurveda).]—§ 208*c* (Astradarçana): When the exhibition had nearly ended there was heard proceeding from the gate the slapping of arms like to the roar of thunder. Then K. (the son of Pṛthā and the Sun) proceeded with his natural mail and ear-ring and bowed to Droṇa and Kṛpa. Having spoken disdainfully to Arjuna, at which Duryodhana was filled with delight, he then, with the permission of Droṇa, did all that Arjuna had done before. Duryodhana and his brothers in joy embraced K. K. asked for a single combat with Arjuna, who rebuked him. Droṇa gave his consent to the encounter. Indra covered Arjuna with clouds, while the Sun dispersed the clouds from K., who remained visible, surrounded by the rays of the Sun. When Kṛpa asked K. to tell his lineage ("sons of kings never fight with men of inferior lineage," v. 5411) K. was ashamed, but Duryodhana (saying, "The origin of kings is, according to the çāstras, threefold—persons of noble blood, heroes, and those who lead an army," v. 5413) immediately installed K. king of the Aṅgas (I, 136). Then Adhiratha entered the lists and embraced K. as his son Bhīmasena, seeing this, scoffed at K. as the son of a charioteer (sūta), but was reprimanded by Duryodhana ("the origin of heroes and rivers is always unknown," examples: the fire that rises from the water; the thunderbolt (vajra) that was made from the bones of Dadhīca; Guha, i.e. Skanda, is named the son of Agni or of the Kṛttikāḥ or of Rudra or of Gaṅgā; Viçvāmitra and other kshatriyas who became brahmans; Droṇa and Kṛpa). When the sun went down Duryodhana led K. out of the arena. Kuntī had recognized K. as her son and was pleased at his success. Duryodhana banished his fear of Arjuna when he had obtained Karṇa's friendship (I, 137): I, 136, 5379, 5381, 5390, 5391, (5393), 5395, 5396, (5397), 5400, 5403, 5404, 5412, 5415, 5418; 137, 5420, 5426, 5438, 5440, 5442, 5443.—§ 209 (Drupadaçāsana): I, 138, 5449, 5463 (assisted by his pupils, and among those by K., Droṇa vanquished Drupada).—§ 213 (Jatugṛhap.): I, 141, 5635, 5655 (Vaikartanaḥ), 5674; 149, 5849; 151, 5920.—§ 214 (Hiḍimbavadhap.): I, 155, 6083 (Ghaṭotkaca was destined to become the antagonist of K. and to be killed with his dart (çakti), which could only slay one person, so that Arjuna might be saved).—§ 231 (Svayaṃvarap.): I, 185, 6957 (Duryodhana-purogamāç ca sa-K°āḥ Kuravaḥ, came to the svayaṃvara of Draupadī).—§ 232 (do.): I, 186, 6984.—§ 233 (do.): I, 187, †7019, †7025, [†7026 (Arkaputraṃ)], †7027 (rejected by Draupadī); [188, 7051 (Rādheya)].—§ 234 (do.): I, 190, 7089, 7091, 7094 (Vaikartanaṃ), 7098 (Vaikartanaḥ), (7100), 7104, 7106 (Rādheyaḥ), 7113, †7155 (encounter with the Pāṇḍavas at the svayaṃvara of Draupadī).—§ 241 (Vidurāgamanap.): I, 200, 7373; 202, (7416).—§ 242 (do., Ambuvīca): I, 204, (7472).—§ 243 (Vidurāgamanap.): I, 204, 7486; 205, 7490, 7516.—§ 280 (Bhīmasena): II, 30, 1092, 1093, 1094 (vanquished by Bhīmasena on his digvijaya).—§ 287 (Rājasūyikap.): II, 34, 1266 (came to the rājasūya of Yudhishṭhira).—§ 289 (Arghāharaṇap.): II, 37, 1353.—§ 290 (Çiçupālavadhap.): II, 44, 1527 (o: the ruler of the country of the Vaṅgas and the Aṅgas (Vaṅgāṅgavishayādhyakshaṃ), with natural ear-rings and armour, by whom Jarāsandha was vanquished and mangled (? dehabhedaṃ lambhitaḥ) in a wrestling encounter).—[§ 294 (Dyūtap.): II, 48, 1712 (Sūtaputraç ca Rādheyaḥ, among the allies of Duryodhana).]—§ 298 (do.): II, 58, 2014 (present at the game); 65, 2184.—§ 299 (do.): II, 67, †2241; 68, (2277) (declared Draupadī to be forfeited).—§ 301 (do.): II, 68, 2338 (declared Draupadī to be a dāsī and ordered Duḥçāsana to drag her away); 71, (2379) (told Draupadī to select another husband); 72, 2416.—§ 302 (Anudyūtap.): II, 74, 2456.—§ 304 (do.):

Kuṇḍalāḥaraṇap.): Asked by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana related the secret which was not revealed to K. by Sūrya. Pṛthā (i.e. Kuntī), the sister of Vasudeva and the daughter of the Vṛshṇi Çūra and adopted by King Kuntibhoja, was ordered by Kuntibhoja to wait upon a brahman of fierce energy (III, 303, 304). After a year the brahman gave her a mantra (Atharvaçirasi çrutaṃ), by which she might invoke the gods (III, 305). When she at the time of her seasons saw the sun's orbit she became possessed of celestial power of vision, and beheld Sūrya with his coat of mail and his ear-rings and invoked him. By way of yoga he divided himself into two, one of whom appeared before Kuntī. At first Kuntī was frightened (III, 306), but Sūrya reassured her, saying: "Thou shalt remain a virgin after having gratified me, and thy son shall have the ear-rings and the coat of mail, made of amṛta, that have been given to me by Aditi," etc.; then he entered her by virtue of yoga (III, 307). This happened in the bright fortnight of the tenth month (çukle daçottare pakshe). Except her nurse nobody else knew about the matter; when the child was born she consulted with her nurse and placed it in a box on the river Açvanadī, imploring protection from Varuṇa, Sūrya, A., V., R., S., V.-D., M., diçaḥ, digīçvarāḥ, I., etc.; from Açvanadī the basket floated to the river Carmaṇvatī, thence to the Yamunā, and so on to the Gaṅgā, to the town of Campā, in the country of the Aṅgas (III, 308), ruled by the sūta Adhiratha (the husband of Rādhā), who was childless. They adopted the child and called him Vasusheṇa and Vṛsha (only afterwards he was named K.). After having adopted K., Adhiratha had other sons begotten by himself. When K. had grown up he was sent to Hāstinapura, and acquired the four kinds of weapons from Droṇa, Kṛpa, and Rāma, and became the friend of Duryodhana, but was intent on injuring the Pāṇḍavas, especially Arjuna. Yudhishṭhira was afraid of him. When K. after rising from the water at noon worshipped Sūrya, brahmans used to solicit him for wealth, and there was nothing that he would not give away to the brahmans (III, 309). Indra in the guise of a brahman appeared before him, asked him for his coat of mail, and gave him instead a dart (Vāsavī), which could not be baffled and which, in the hands of Indra, destroyed the Daityas and then returned to him. "This dart can only slay one powerful enemy of thine and then it will return to me, but it will not be that one which thou seekest to slay, for he is protected by Kṛshṇa." K. cut the coat of mail and ear-rings off his person, Indra having granted him that his body thus disfigured should not become unsightly. Gods and men and Dānavas raised a leonine roar. For this feat he was called Karṇa. The Dhārtarāshṭras became distressed and the Pāṇḍavas were filled with joy. Having rescued Kṛshṇā from Jayadratha and listened to the ancient stories recited by Mārkaṇḍeya, the Pāṇḍavas returned from Kāmyaka to Dvaitavana (III, 310): III, 303, 16998; 309, 17172, 17173 (Sūryasambhavaḥ), 17175; 310, (17183), 17184, 17190, 17196, 17197, (17198), 17199, 17200, (17203), (17206), 17208, 17209, (17211), †17213, †17214, †17215, †17216, †17217.—§ 548 (Āraṇeyap.): III, 315, 17453.—§ 551 (Kīcakavadhap.): IV, 21, 646.—§ 552 (Goharaṇap.): IV, 25, 867; 26, 890, 897 (recommended to inquire about the Pāṇḍavas); 30, 973, 977, 984, 990 (Vaikartanasya, recommended to undertake the expedition for ravishing the cattle of Virāṭa); 35a*, 1150; 36, 1176 (Vaikartanaṃ); 38, 1238, 1243; 39, (1299); 47, 1472; 48, (1507) (promised to slay Arjuna); 49, 1540, 1547, 1551; 50, 1554; 51, 1583, 1587, 1599; 52, 1624, 1629 (Sūtaputraḥ, in the van of Duryodhana's array); 53, 1643; 54, †1666, †1682, †1685, †1687, †1689 (Vaikartanaṃ), †1690, †1692, †1693 (is defeated by Arjuna); 55, 1734, 1735, 1750 (Vaikartanaḥ, on the top of his standard there was the device of an elephant's rope, nāgakakshā); 59, 1908, 1917, 1919, 1921 (Arjuna rushed towards K.); 60, 1923, 1924, 1930, (1931), 1939, 1940, 1943, 1944, 1946, 1947 (is defeated by Arjuna); 63, 2021, 2024; 66, †2107, †2117 (stupefied by Arjuna, who caused Uttara to bring K.'s yellow robes away); 68, 2168, 2232 (padaṃ padasahasreṇa yaç caran nāparādhnuyāt).—§ 553*b* (Yudhishṭhira): IV, 70, 2286.—§ 554 (Sainyodyogap.): V, [2, †31 (sa-Sūtaputraṃ)]; 3, 60; [4, 65 (Rādheya-Saubalau)].—§ 555 (do.): V, 8, 214 (Çalya [Karṇa-digvijaya(ḥ)] ("subjection of the earth by Karṇa"). § 515 (Ghoshay.). When Duryodhana had come to Hāstinapura, Bhīshma said to him that, as he had told him before, this journey did not please him, and advised him to make peace with the Pāṇḍavas. Duryodhana laughed and sallied out with Çakuni, followed by Karṇa and Duḥçāsana. When Bhīshma, ashamed, had gone away, they returned and began to consult. Karṇa complained of the partiality of Bhīshma for the Pāṇḍavas, and promised to conquer the world for Duryodhana. Duryodhana gladly accepted his offer, and on an auspicious lunar day, etc., Karṇa set out (III, 253). Karṇa, surrounded by a large army, first made Drupada and the princes that were under him pay tribute. He then successively conquered the north (Bhagadatta, the kings inhabiting the Himavat), the east (the Aṅgas, Vaṅgas, Kaliṅgas, Maṇḍikas (B. Çuṇḍika), Mithilas, Māgadhas, Karkakhaṇḍas, Āvaçiras, Yodhyas, Ahikshattra, Vatsabhūmi, Kevalī, Mṛttikāvatī, Mohana, Pattana, Tripurā, Koçalā), the south (Rukmin, the Pāṇḍya mountain, Kerala, Nīla, the son of Veṇudāri, Çaiçupāla, the Āvantyas, the Vṛshṇis, etc.), and the west (Yāvanas, Barbaras, etc.), with the Mlecchas, the mountaineers, Bhadras, Rohitakas, Āgneyas, Mālavas, Çaçakas, Nagnajit, etc. Having returned to Hāstinapura, he was highly praised by Duryodhana and Dhṛtarāshṭra, who sat with Gāndhārī (III, 254).

Karṇanirvāka, a muni. § 677 (Mokshadh.): XII, 245*β, 8901.

Karṇaparvan ("the section relating to Karṇa," the 8th of the greater and the 79th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). § 4 (Anukram.): I, 1, 90 (°sitaiḥ pushpaiḥ). — § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 346. — § 11 (do.): I, 2, 542, 549. — § 604: THE NIGHT AFTER DROṆA'S DEATH, AND THE SIXTEENTH MORNING, AND BRIEF ACCOUNT OF THE SIXTEENTH AND SEVENTEENTH DAYS. After Droṇa's death the Kuru warriors in grief, with Duryodhana at their head, repaired to Açvatthāman. When night came (!) they proceeded to their tents, but could not sleep (α); they (α) passed that night together in Duryodhana's tent, reflecting (β). When morning came they rose and performed their customary rites. Arranging their troops they proceeded to battle, making Karṇa their leader. The Pāṇḍavas also proceeded to battle. Karṇa fought for two days and was then slain by Arjuna. Sañjaya repaired to Hāstinapura and informed Dhṛtarāshṭra of Karṇa's fall. Janamejaya inquired about Dhṛtarāshṭra and the details of the battle (VIII, 1). Vaiçampāyana said: After the fall of Karṇa, Sañjaya set out that night for Hāstinapura and spoke with Dhṛtarāshṭra (γ) (VIII, 2). Sañjaya related the discouragement of the Kuru army after the fall of Droṇa; Duryodhana's spirited address; Karṇa was made generalissimo but slain by Arjuna on the second day (δ) (VIII, 3). Hearing of Karṇa's fall in battle, Dhṛtarāshṭra swooned away; he and the ladies were restored to their senses; Dhṛtarāshṭra inquired whether Duryodhana was still alive; Sañjaya informed him of Duḥçāsana's slaughter (ε) (VIII, 4). Requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra, Sañjaya recounted the names of those that had fallen and those that were still alive; Dhṛtarāshṭra once more swooned away (ζ) (VIII, 5–7). Dhṛtarāshṭra's lament for Karṇa (η) (VIII, 8); Sañjaya endeavoured to comfort him; continuation of Dhṛtarāshṭra's lament (θ) (VIII, 9). — § 605. THE SIXTEENTH DAY: After Droṇa's fall the Kauravas, having fled and been rallied by Duryodhana, fought for a long time with the Pāṇḍavas (Arjuna). On the approach of the evening twilight (!) the Kauravas retired to their encampment; they held a consultation in the night; Duryodhana inquired of his counsellors as to what should next be done. Açvatthāman suggested the installation of Karṇa as generalissimo (ι). Duryodhana offered Karṇa the command, which Karṇa accepted, promising to slay the Pāṇḍavas (κ). Karṇa was installed in the command and blessed by the brahmans, and ordered the troops to be arrayed at the rise of the sun (λ) (VIII, 10). Beholding Karṇa, none recked the loss of Bhīshma or Droṇa, etc. He formed a makara array: the tip (μ), the two eyes (ν), the head (ξ), the neck (ο), the middle (π), the left foot (ρ), the right foot (σ), the left hind-foot (τ), the right hind-foot (υ), the tail (φ). Yudhishṭhira asked Arjuna to array the Pāṇḍava army and slay Karṇa ("incapable of being vanquished by . . . D., As., G., K., and M.-U."). The Pāṇḍava troops were arrayed in the shape of the half-moon; the left side (χ), the right side (ψ), the middle (ω), the rear (αα); Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas became the protectors of Arjuna's chariot wheels, and did not quit him for a moment. Then commenced the battle (VIII, 11). A fierce slaughter on both sides (description). Dhṛshṭadyumna, etc. (ββ), headed by Bhīmasena & Kshemadhūrti (Kulūtādhipatiḥ), who was slain by Bhīmasena. The Kurus fled away (VIII, 12). Nakula & Karṇa; Bhīmasena & Açvatthāman; Sātyaki & the Kaikaya princes (brothers) Vinda and Anuvinda; King Citrasena & Çrutakarman; Prativindhya & Citra; Duryodhana & Yudhishṭhira; Arjuna & the Saṃçaptakas; Dhṛshṭadyumna & Kṛpa; Çikhaṇḍin & Kṛtavarman; Çrutakīrti & Çalya; Sahadeva & Duḥçāsana. Anuvinda was slain by Sātyaki, and so was Vinda; Sātyaki got upon the chariot of Yudhāmanyu, then upon another chariot; the Kaikeyas fled (VIII, 13). Çrutakarman & the Abhisāra king Citrasena, whom he slew and then he pursued his flying troops. Prativindhya & Citra, whom he slew. The Kurus fled; only Açvatthāman & Bhīmasena (VIII, 14); Si., Cā., D., and M.-ṛ. applauded them; both were borne away insensible by their drivers (VIII, 15). Arjuna & the Saṃçaptakas; Si., D.-ṛ., and Cā. applauded him, etc. Açvatthāman & Arjuna (+ Kṛshṇa), who fought also the Saṃçaptakas (VIII, 16); the Kaliṅga, Vaṅga, and Nishāda heroes attacked Arjuna with a division of elephants, which was broken; Kṛshṇa urged Arjuna not to spare Açvatthāman, who at last was borne away by his steeds and entered the army of Karṇa; Kṛshṇa and Arjuna proceeded towards the Saṃçaptakas (VIII, 17). The Magadha chief (lord of Girivraja) Daṇḍadhāra massacred the Pāṇḍava army. Arjuna (urged by Kṛshṇa) & Daṇḍadhāra (on an elephant), whom he slew; his brother Daṇḍa & Arjuna (+ Kṛshṇa), who slew him; the hostile force broke up; Arjuna proceeded once more against the Saṃçaptakas (VIII, 18), whom he slaughtered; Ugrāyudha's son & Arjuna, who slew him; urged by Kṛshṇa, Arjuna smote the remnant of the Saṃçaptakas, hastening in order to kill Karṇa; Kṛshṇa described the dismal sights of the field of battle "for the sake of Duryodhana alone". The army of Duryodhana was defeated by Pāṇḍya (VIII, 19), who regarded himself as superior to Bhīshma, etc. (γγ), and was slaughtering the army of Karṇa, the Pulindas, etc. (δδ); Açvatthāman & Pāṇḍya (b), who employed the Vāyavya weapon; meanwhile Karṇa began to rout the elephant force of the Pāṇḍavas; Pāṇḍya ascended a riderless elephant and split Açvatthāman's diadem; then Açvatthāman slew him, who had given numerous steeds, men, and elephants as food to the Rā. Duryodhana and his brothers worshipped Karṇa (VIII, 20). Kṛshṇa said to Arjuna that he did not see Yudhishṭhira; the Pāṇḍavas had retreated, and Karṇa was slaying the Sṛñjayas. The Kurus (headed by Karṇa) & the Pāṇḍavas (headed by Bhīmasena); Karṇa caused a great carnage among the Pāṇḍavas, Sṛñjayas, and Pāñcālas. The Pāñcāla chief, etc. (εε), & Karṇa (VIII, 21); Dhṛshṭadyumna & the Aṅgas, etc. (ζζ); the Pāṇḍavas and the Pāñcālas come to the aid of Dhṛshṭadyumna; Nakula, etc. (ηη), overloaded the elephants with their weapons; Sātyaki killed the elephant of the Vaṅga king and felled the rider; Sahadeva & Puṇḍra, whose elephant he slew, and then proceeded towards the Aṅga chief; Nakula & the Aṅga king (Mleccha king), whom he slew; the elephant-men of the Aṅgas + Mekalas, etc. (θθ), & Nakula; then the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ιι), rushed to the rescue of Nakula; Sahadeva slew eight elephants and Nakula many; Dhṛshṭadyumna, etc. (κκ), overloaded the elephants with arrows; the hostile army fled away and the Pāṇḍava warriors rushed against Karṇa (VIII, 22). Sahadeva & Duḥçāsana, who was taken away by his charioteer; Sahadeva crushed Duryodhana's division (VIII, 23). Karṇa & Nakula; both the Somakas and Kurus were greatly afflicted; Nakula fled on foot; Karṇa pursued him and placed his stringed bow around his neck, but let him escape, recollecting the words of Kuntī; Nakula in great shame proceeded towards Yudhishṭhira's chariot, which he ascended. Karṇa at noon made a great slaughter among the Pāñçālas and the Sṛñjayas, and pursued them (VIII, 24). Ulūka & Yuyutsu, who was vanquished and mounted another chariot. Ulūka slaughtered the Pāñcālas and the Sṛñjayas. Çrutakarman (Dhārtarāshṭra) & Çatānīka; both were deprived of their chariots and retired; Çrutakarman mounted the chariot of Viviṃça, Çatānīka that of Pratīvindhya. Çakuni & Sutasoma, who was deprived of his chariot, but contended on foot with Çakuni, who fought from his chariot; the Si., etc., were highly pleased; Sutasoma went to the chariot of Çrutakīrti; Çakuni slew many of the Pāṇḍava army (VIII, 25). Kṛpa & Dhṛshṭadyumna, who got bewildered and let his charioteer carry him to Bhīmasena, pursued by Kṛpa. Kṛtavarman (the Bhoja king) & Çikhaṇḍin, who fell into a swoon, and was borne away by his charioteer; the Pāṇḍava army fled (VIII, 26). Arjuna & the Trigartas, etc. (λλ); Arjuna slew king Çatruñjaya, and Suçruta's son, and Candradeva; King Satyasena wounded Kṛshṇa and was slain by Arjuna, who then slew Citravarman and the Saṃçaptakas in hundreds and thousands, and Mitrasena, and wounded Suçarman; all the Saṃçaptakas attacked Arjuna, who invoked the Aindra weapon (description); the hostile army fled away almost entirely (VIII, 27). Duryodhana & Yudhishṭhira, who deprived him of his chariot; Karṇa, etc. (μμ), rushed to his aid; the other sons of Pāṇḍu surrounded Yudhishṭhira; the Pāñcālas & the Kauravas (description); Karṇa slaughtered the Pāñcālas, Arjuna the Trigartas, Bhīmasena the Kurus and their elephant division, when the sun had passed the meridian (VIII, 28); Duryodhana (on another chariot) & Yudhishṭhira; Duryodhana swooned away; Bhīmasena prevented Yudhishṭhira from slaying Duryodhana; Kṛtavarman & Bhīmasena in the afternoon (VIII, 29). The Kurus (placing Karṇa at their van) & the Pāṇḍava army (and Sātyaki); Karṇa & Sātyaki; many Kurus came to rescue Karṇa, but fled away before the Pāṇḍavas, who were headed by the sons of Drupada; Arjuna and Kṛshṇa (having said their daily prayers and worshipped Bhava) destroyed the Kurus; Duryodhana & Arjuna; Arjuna & Açvatthāman + Kṛpa, etc. (νν); Sātyaki, etc. (ξξ), & Karṇa, who vanquished them; Arjuna & Karṇa; many Kurus fled away. At the close of the day both armies withdrew; Rā. and Pç., etc., appeared (VIII, 30). Dhṛtarāshṭra exalted the prowess of Arjuna (οο). The Kurus, in grief, took counsel of one another; Karṇa assured Duryodhana that he would slay Arjuna on the morrow. On the morrow they beheld an invincible array formed by Yudhishṭhira according to the rules of Bṛhaspati and Uçanas. Duryodhana and his troops put confidence in Karṇa. Dhṛtarāshṭra's grief (ππ); Sañjaya rebuked him by reminding him of his evil acts (ρρ). At dawn Karṇa repeated before Duryodhana his pledge to slaughter Arjuna; "my bow Vijaya (c) is the foremost of all weapons; . . . Arjuna is superior to me only by having Kṛshṇa ('the Creator of the Universe') for his charioteer, the chariot given him by Agni, his steed, and his standard with the Ape." He desired to have Çalya ("who is superior to Kṛshṇa") to drive his chariot; Duryodhana solicited Çalya (VIII, 31) to comply with Karṇa's wishes (σσ); Çalya took offence at the proposal (ττ); Duryodhana repeated his request in honorific words (νν), and Çalya accepted on the condition that he might, in Karṇa's presence, utter whatever he desired (φφ) (VIII, 32). § 606: Duryodhana related to Çalya Tripurākhyāna (q.v.), which the great Ṛ. Mārkaṇḍeya had narrated to his father. "As Brahmán, . . . the Supreme Deity acted as the driver of Rudra, so do thou restrain the steeds of Karṇa" (VIII, 33). He then related a story of Paraçu-Rāma (b), which a virtuous brahman had recited in the presence of his father. Rāma gave the Dhanurveda to Karṇa, "whom I do not think to have been born in the Sūta order, but to be the son of a god, born in the Kshatriya order and abandoned in infancy" (VIII, 34). Duryodhana said: "So did Brahmán act as Rudra's driver; the driver should be superior to the warrior; thou art selected by us as superior to Karṇa." Çalya said that many a time he had heard this history recited to him, and Kṛshṇa, knowing the same, had become the charioteer of Arjuna, and would fight if Arjuna were slain. Duryodhana eulogized Karṇa (a) and then Çalya (etymology) as superior to Kṛshṇa. Çalya repeated his promise and condition. Duryodhana embraced Karṇa, and, requested by him, once more obtained the promise of Çalya, who embraced Duryodhana and asked their forgiveness for the words he might speak to Karṇa for his good; "what I shall say, in order to inspire thee confidence, is fraught with self-adulation; I am a driver like Mātali himself" (VIII, 35). —§ 607: Duryodhana said to Karṇa: "Çalya, who is superior to Kṛshṇa, will act as a driver, like Mātali to Indra." When the morning came, Duryodhana again successfully asked Çalya to become Karṇa's charioteer. Karṇa having worshipped the chariot (which had in days of old been sanctified by a priest), they both ascended it. Duryodhana once more addressed Karṇa (α). Karṇa told Çalya to urge the steeds that he might slay Arjuna, etc. (β); Çalya endeavoured to inspire Karṇa with fear by eulogizing the Pāṇḍavas (VIII, 36). When Karṇa set out there appeared ill omens. The Kuru army, however, was filled with joy. Karṇa reflected and boasted (γ). Çalya ridiculed him and praised Arjuna (δ). Karṇa proceeded on his chariot with white steeds and tiger-skins, slaying large numbers in battle along his way, and inquired after Arjuna (VIII, 37), promising every Pāṇḍava soldier that he met that unto him who pointed out Arjuna to him he would give whatever wealth he desired. Duryodhana and the troops rejoiced; Çalya scornfully laughed, and said (VIII, 38) that Karṇa would get to see Arjuna without the trouble of seeking him, and asked him to abandon his desire for a single combat with Arjuna. Karṇa repeated his resolution, and Çalya insulted him in a long speech (VIII, 39). Karṇa replied angrily, describing the disreputable practices of the Madrakas (and the Gāndhārakas and Sindhu-Sauvīras) (VIII, 40). Çalya answered by praising himself and his accomplishments as a charioteer (description), and by reciting the story of the crow and the swan (Haṃsakākīyopākhyāna, q.v.): "Even as that crow, fed upon the remains of the dinners of the Vaiçya children, disregarded his equals and superiors, so dost thou, that art fed by the sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra upon the remains of their dishes, disregard all," etc. (ε) (VIII, 41). Karṇa said that Kṛshṇa and Arjuna were well known to him, but did not make him afraid. The curse, however, of [Paraçu-]Rāma pained him greatly. He dwelt, disguised as a brahman, with Rāma in former days, desirous of obtaining celestial weapons from him. Indra, as a worm, began to pierce his thigh, on which was lying the head of the sleeping Rāma; therefore he did not move. But Rāma, witnessing his patience, discovered that he was not a brahman, and cursed him, saying that this weapon would never, in the time of need, when the hour of his death came, occur to his memory. He had forgotten the weapon, but would, notwithstanding, slay Arjuna; he suspected Çalya of secret friendship with the Pāṇḍavas; he would employ the Brāhma weapon, which Arjuna would never be able to escape, if only the wheels of Karṇa's chariot did not sink into the earth that day; he would not take fright at Yama himself with his rod, or Varuṇa with his noose, or Kubera with his mace, or Indra with the thunderbolt. "Once upon a time, while wandering for the sake of practising with my bow Vijaya, I had heedlessly struck the calf of a brahman's homa cow; the brahman cursed me, saying that my wheel would sink into the earth in a battle when I was in great danger. The kings of the Lunar race offered to give that brahman 1,000 kine and 600 bulls, but in vain," etc. (VIII, 42). Karṇa said that it was in vain that Çalya tried to frighten him (ζ) (VIII, 43). Karṇa said that in Dhṛtarāshṭra's abode the brahmans used to give accounts of various delightful regions and many kings of ancient times; an old brahman had said, blaming the Madrakas and the Bāhīkas, that they should be avoided as being out of the pale of virtue and living away from Himavat, etc. (η), but between Sindhu and its tributary rivers. On some very secret mission Karṇa had to live among the Bāhīkas, and therefore their conduct was well known to him; "there is a town Çākala, a river Āpagā, and a Bāhīka clan Jarttikas; the practices of these people are very censurable" (description; an example is cited of a Bāhīka who happened to live for some days in Kurujāṅgala, and a Rā. woman in Çākala; the rivers Çatadru, etc. (θ), in the countries of the Āraṭṭas, regions without virtue and religion). "D., P., and brahmans never accept gifts from those that are fallen, or those that are begotten by Çūdras on the girls of other castes, or the Bāhīkas, who never perform sacrifices and are exceedingly irreligious." He mentioned three impure places (ι) (v. the note of PCR., p. 155). There were two Piçācas in the river Vipāçā, named Bahi and Hīka; the Bāhīkas are the offspring of those two Pç.; they are not creatures created by the Creator. The Kārashkaras, etc. (κ), and other peoples of no religion one should always avoid; even thus did a Rā. woman speak to a brahman who went to that country for bathing in sacred water and passed a single night there. The regions are called Āraṭṭāḥ, the water Bāhīka; the lowest brahmans have resided there from very remote times (brāhmaṇāpasadā yatra tulyakālāḥ Prajāpateḥ), without the Vedas, etc. The Prasthalas, etc. (λ), are almost as blameable in their practices (VIII, 44). Karṇa continued his description of the Bāhīkas (and Gāndhāras and Madrakas). The Āraṭṭas had been cursed by a chaste woman. The Kauravas, etc. (μ), know what the eternal religion is. Brahmán, even in the Kṛta age, had censured the practices of the country of the five rivers. K. quoted a saying of the Rā. Kalmāshapāda, declared by the Rākshasa to be the formula for curing a person possessed by a Rā. or killed by poison. Remarks on the Pāñcālas, etc. (ν), on Agni, etc. (ξ). Çalya spoke in disparagement of the Aṅgas (ο). Duryodhana restored peace between Karṇa and Çalya (VIII, 45).—§ 608: THE SEVENTEENTH DAY'S BATTLE. Beholding the array of the Pārthas made by Dhṛshṭadyumna, Karṇa proceeded to battle and assailed Yudhishṭhira. Dhṛtarāshṭra inquired about the disposition of the Kuru forces (α). Sañjaya described the Kaurava array: right wing (β); on the right of these (γ); the left side (δ); on their left (ε); in the centre at the head Karṇa with his sons; in the rear Duḥçāsana; and behind him Duryodhana and his brothers, protected by the united Madrakas and Kekayas; Açvatthāman, etc., with Mlecchas on elephants followed behind. The array was formed according to the plan of Bṛhaspati. Yudhishṭhira, beholding Karṇa, spoke to Arjuna of the hostile array: Arjuna should proceed against Karṇa; Bhīmasena against Duryodhana; Nakula against Vṛshasena; Sahadeva against Çakuni; Çatānīka against Duḥçāsana; Sātyaki against Kṛtavarman; Pāṇḍya against Açvatthāman; Yudhishṭhira against Kṛpa; the Draupadeyas with Çikhaṇḍin against the rest of the Dhārtarāshṭras, etc. Çalya pointed out to Karṇa the chariot of Arjuna (b) and various omens, etc. (ζ); how the Saṃçaptakas threatened to slay Arjuna and the other heroes of the Pāṇḍava army (η), and he dissuaded him from trying to slay Arjuna. Meanwhile the two armies mingled fiercely in battle (VIII, 46). Dhṛtarāshṭra asked Sañjaya about Arjuna, the Saṃçaptakas, and Karṇa. Sañjaya related: Arjuna arrayed his troops, headed by Dhṛshṭadyumna (with steeds white as pigeons); by the side of Dhṛshṭadyumna the Draupadeyas. Arjuna & the Saṃçaptakas. The Pāñcālas, etc. (θ), & the Kurus; Kṛpa, etc. (ι), & the Koçalas, etc. (κ); the battle became conducive to fame, heaven, and virtue for the kshatriya, vaiçya, and çūdra heroes that engaged in it. Duryodhana, etc. (λ) + Karṇa & the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (μ); Karṇa harassed Yudhishṭhira; fierce battle between the Kurus and the Sṛñjayas (VIII, 47). Dhṛtarāshṭra inquired about the particulars of Karṇa's encounter with Yudhishṭhira. Sañjaya related: Karṇa attacked the Pāñcālas (and Prabhadrakas and Cedis) and made a great slaughter; among others he slew the five Pāñcālas Bhānudeva, etc. (ν). The protectors of Karṇa's chariot-wheels were his sons Susheṇa and Satyasena, and his eldest son Vṛshasena protected his rear. Dhṛshṭadyumna, etc. (ξ), & Karṇa + Karṇa's sons; Susheṇa & Bhīmasena, who pierced him with seventy arrows and then slew Karṇa's son Bhānusena; Bhīmasena & Kṛpa, etc. (ο); Bhīmasena & Susheṇa + Karṇa; Susheṇa & Nakula + Sahadeva; Sātyaki & Vṛshasena, who was taken up by Duḥçāsana on the latter's chariot, borne away, and caused to ride in another chariot; Vṛshasena & the Draupadeyas, etc. (π); Yuyudhāna & Duḥçāsana, whom he deprived of his chariot, etc., but who got another chariot and fought from within the division of Karṇa; Karṇa & Dhṛshṭadyumna, etc. (ρ); at last Karṇa's assailants gave way; Karṇa & Yudhishṭhira + the Cedis, etc. (σ) (VIII, 48); the Drāviḍas, etc. (τ), & Karṇa, who crushed them; Karṇa & Yudhishṭhira, etc. (υ); Yudhishṭhira addressed Karṇa in rage (φ); Karṇa swooned away, but recovered and slew Yudhishṭhira's wheel-protectors, the Pāñcāla princes Candradeva and Daṇḍadhāra; Yudhishṭhira struck Susheṇa and Satyasena, etc.; Sātyaki, etc. (χ), & Karṇa, who invoked the Brāhma weapon; Karṇa deprived Yudhishṭhira of his chariot; Yudhishṭhira fled, riding in another chariot with the white steeds with black hair on their tails that used to bear him, pursued by Karṇa (σ), who touched him with his hand, but remembered the words of Kuntī and was withheld by Çalya, but insulted Yudhishṭhira (ψ) and let him escape. The Cedis, etc. (ω), followed Yudhishṭhira; Karṇa made a great slaughter of the Pāṇḍava forces; Yudhishṭhira urged his forces to proceed against Karṇa, which they did, headed by Bhīmasena (+ Sātyaki) (description); the Kurus broke and fled away (VIII, 49). Duryodhana in vain tried to stop the flying troops. Then Çakuni, etc. + Karṇa & Bhīmasena, who let Sātyaki and Dhṛshṭadyumna protect Yudhishṭhira; Çalya pointed out Bhīma to Karṇa (αα); Karṇa replied (ββ); Karṇa swooned and was brought away by Çalya (VIII, 50). Requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra (γγ), Sañjaya related: Urged by Duryodhana, several Kuru leaders (δδ) assailed Bhīma, who slew, among others, six sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra (εε). The other sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra fled away. Karṇa & Bhīmasena, whom he deprived of his chariot, but who then with his mace killed elephants and men by hundreds, among others fifty-two elephants belonging to Çakuni; next 3,000 horsemen dispatched by Çakuni, then he mounted another chariot and proceeded against Karṇa. Karṇa & Yudhishṭhira, whom he pursued as he was flying away; Bhīmasena & Karṇa; Sātyaki & Karṇa. Beholding Çakuni, etc. (ζζ), the Kurus rallied when the sun had reached the meridian. Fierce battle (VIII, 51); (description) (VIII, 52). Arjuna & the Saṃçaptakas, etc. (ηη); Arjuna (+ Kṛshṇa) & Suçarman; Arjuna repeatedly invoked the Nāga weapon, paralysing the legs (encircled with snakes) of the Saṃçaptakas; Suçarman invoked the Sauparṇa weapon; birds came down and devoured the snakes; Arjuna sat down, recovered, and invoked the Aindra weapon; the battle became awful (VIII, 53). Kṛtavarman, etc. (θθ), began a fierce battle; Kṛpa & Çikhaṇḍin (+ the Sṛñjayas); Çikhaṇḍin was deprived of his chariot and made inactive; Dhṛshṭadyumna proceeded against Kṛpa; Kṛtavarman & Dhṛshṭadyumna; Açvatthāman & Yudhishṭhira (proceeding towards the chariot of Kṛpa); Duryodhana & Nakula and Sahadeva; Karṇa & Bhīmasena, etc. (ιι); Kṛpa & Çikhaṇḍin; Suketu (the son of Citraketu) & Kṛpa; Çikhaṇḍin retreated; Kṛpa slew Suketu, whose troops fled away; Kṛtavarman & Dhṛshṭadyumna, who made him driverless and was assailed by the Kurus (VIII, 54). Açvatthāman & Yudhishṭhira, etc. (κκ) (description); Prativindhya, etc. (λλ), & Açvatthāman; Sātyaki had his driver slain; Yudhishṭhira went away, leaving his division, against the Kurus; Açvatthāman also left the spot (VIII, 55). Karṇa & Bhīmasena, etc. (μμ), who, avoiding Karṇa, proceeded against the Kurus; Arjuna & the Saṃçaptakas; Bhīmasena & the Kauravas; Karṇa & the Pāñcālas; Duryodhana & Nakula and Sahadeva; Dhṛshṭadyumna (in order to rescue Nakula and Sahadeva) & Duryodhana (d), who was rescued by his brothers and borne away by Daṇḍadhāra upon the latter's chariot. Karṇa (having vanquished Sātyaki and desirous of rescuing Duryodhana) & Dhṛshṭadyumna + Sātyaki (pursuing Karṇa from behind) + the Pāñcālas; a fierce battle between the two armies when the sun had ascended the meridian; Karṇa & Vyāghraketu, etc. (νν) (description) (οο). Yudhishṭhira, etc. (ππ), & Karṇa. Bhīmasena slew the Kurus: Bāhlīkas, etc. (ρρ) (description) (σσ). Arjuna addressed Kṛshṇa upon beholding Karṇa's (e) prowess, and seeing that the Saṃçaptakas were broken. Arjuna (and Kṛshṇa) broke through the Kuru host. Duryodhana once more urged the Saṃçaptakas against him. Having slain 10,000 kshatriyas, Arjuna came to the further wing of the Saṃçaptakas, which was protected by the Kāmbojas; the younger brother of the Kāmboja chief Sudakshiṇa was killed by Arjuna; the Kāmbojas, etc. (ττ), were slain. Açvatthāman & Arjuna (+ Kṛshṇa); Si. and Cā. came; Kṛshṇa urged Arjuna not to spare Açvatthāman, who swooned and was carried away by his driver; Arjuna slew the Kuru troops. Arjuna had routed the Saṃçaptakas, Bhīmasena the Kurus, Karṇa the Pāñcālas. Yudhishṭhira, pained by his wounds, had retreated a kroça (VIII, 56). Duryodhana addressed the Kuru leaders (νν). Açvatthāman swore to slay Dhṛshṭadyumna or not to doff his armour (φφ). A fierce battle commenced. D., Aps., etc., came; Aps. rained flowers, etc., on the combatants (VIII, 57). Arjuna pointed out to Kṛshṇa that the Pāṇḍava army was flying away, Karṇa slaying their warriors, and Yudhishṭhira nowhere to be seen; "the third part of the day still remains." Arjuna proceeded to Yudhishṭhira (+ Sṛñjayas); Kṛshṇa described the field of battle to Arjuna (χχ). A terrible battle commenced (VIII, 58). The Kurus (headed by Karṇa) & the Sṛñjayas (Pārthas, headed by Yudhishṭhira); a remnant only of the Saṃçaptakas were left alive. Dhṛshṭadyumna + the Pāṇḍavas (and all the kings on their side) & Karṇa; Sātyaki & Karṇa; Açvatthāman & Dhṛshṭadyumna; Karṇa & the Pāñcālas, etc. (ψψ); Dhṛshṭadyumna was worsted by Açvatthāman and rescued by Arjuna; Arjuna & Açvatthāman (abandoning Dhṛshṭadyumna); Dhṛshṭadyumna was brought away by Sahadeva on the latter's chariot; Açvatthāman swooned on his chariot and was carried away by his driver. Arjuna proceeded towards the Saṃçaptakas (VIII, 59).

Kṛshṇa pointed out to Arjuna that Yudhishṭhira was being pursued by many Dhārtarāshṭras, headed by Duryodhana, while the Pāñcālas were following in order to rescue him, and that he was in great danger, though the Kurus had been checked by Sātyaki and Bhīma, because Duryodhana, etc. (ωω), would break down the very mountains; "Yudhishṭhira is exceedingly emaciated in consequence of his fastings; he is endued with Brāhma force, but not with much of kshatriya might"; he was surrounded by the Dhārtarāshṭra warriors with the weapons Sthūṇākarṇa, etc. (aaa); in the very sight of the twins, etc. (βββ), Karṇa was destroying the Pāṇḍava division, and rushing against Bhīmasena; having vanquished the Pāñcālas, etc. (γγγ), he would soon come against Arjuna, and he was protected by Duryodhana; he should be slain; Karṇa was rushing against Dhṛshṭadyumna in order to exterminate the Pāñcālas; however, Yudhishṭhira was living; Bhīma (+ Sṛñjayas and Sātyaki) and the Pāñcālas were now conquering the Kauravas, who were flying away, Kṛpa and Karṇa, etc., resisting the Pāñcālas (headed by Dhṛshṭadyumna); the Nishāda prince (coming on his elephant against Yudhishṭhira) was slain by Bhīma, who had checked three akshauhiṇīs of Duryodhana's soldiers. Arjuna then destroyed the remnant of his foes; the Saṃçaptakas fled (VIII, 60). Requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra (δδδ), Sañjaya related: Karṇa, etc., & Bhīmasena + the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (εεε); Çikhaṇḍin & Karṇa; Dhṛshṭadyumna & Duḥçāsana; Nakula & Vṛshasena (at the side of his father); Yudhishṭhira & Citrasena; Sahadeva & Ulūka; Sātyaki & Çakuni; the Draupadeyas & the other Kauravas; Açvatthāman & Arjuna; Kṛpa & Yudhāmanyu; Kṛtavarman & Uttamaujas; Çikhaṇḍin was deprived of his chariot by Karṇa and retreated; Dhṛshṭadyumna (+ many Pāñcālas) & Duḥçāsana: Si. and Aps., etc., wondered. Karṇa endeavours to rally the retreating troops of the Dhārtarāshṭras. After Karṇa had gone away, Nakula proceeded against the Kauravas; Karṇa's son, avoiding Nakula, went to Karṇa in order to protect his chariot-wheel. Ulūka was made driverless by Sahadeva and entered the division of the Trigartas. Çakuni ascended the chariot of Ulūka, who took him away from Sātyaki, who then routed the Kuru army. Duryodhana & Bhīmasena, who deprived him of his chariot and bow and made him fly away; the whole Kuru army attacked Bhīmasena, who scattered them. Yudhāmanyu retreated on his chariot, driving it himself. Uttamaujas sat down and was taken away by his driver. The whole Kuru army attacked Bhīmasena; Duḥçāsana and Çakuni (with an elephant force) & Bhīmasena, who made Duryodhana fly away, invoked his celestial weapons, and scattered and destroyed them (description) (VIII, 61). Arjuna (with Kṛshṇa) appeared. Duryodhana (with half his troops in order to seize Yudhishṭhira) & Yudhishṭhira, whose warriors (ζζζ) then came to rescue him with an akshauhiṇī; Karṇa checked them all; Sahadeva (invoking a celestial weapon) & Duryodhana; Karṇa began an onslaught on the troops of Yudhishṭhira and Dhṛshṭadyumna; they fled away; Karṇa & Yudhishṭhira, who sat down and ordered his driver to retreat; Duryodhana and the Dhārtarāshṭras pursued him; but 1,700 Kekaya troops and a body of Pāñcāla troops checked them. Duryodhana & Bhīma (VIII, 62). Karṇa & the Kaikayas, who fled to Bhīmasena. Karṇa & Yudhishṭhira (who was proceeding slowly towards the Pāṇḍava encampment with Nakula and Sahadeva, the protectors of his chariot-wheels, on his two sides); Nakula and Sahadeva & Karṇa, who slew the steeds both of Yudhishṭhira and Nakula, who both ascended the chariot of Sahadeva; Çalya, in order to rescue them, exhorted Karṇa to fight with Arjuna, but in vain; Yudhishṭhira turned from the battle; Çalya once more reminded Karṇa of Arjuna, etc. (ηηη), and that Duryodhana was in danger from Bhīmasena. Karṇa then left Yudhishṭhira and the twins and rushed to the rescue of Duryodhana. Yudhishṭhira in shame retreated with the steeds of Sahadeva, with the twins, whom he then dispatched to Bhīma (VIII, 63). Açvatthāman & Arjuna; Açvatthāman employed the Aindra weapon, which Arjuna baffled with a powerful weapon created by Indra; Açvatthāman, having had his driver slain, himself guided his steeds while he fought with Arjuna; then he was brought away by his steeds. The Pāṇḍavas, repeatedly charging the Kauravas, broke their ranks and caused them to fly away in the very sight of Dhṛtarāshṭra's sons, etc. (θθθ). Duryodhana caused Karṇa to rally the troops; Karṇa, employing the Bhārgava weapon, harassed the Pāñcālas, who, with the Cedis, began to lose their senses. The Sṛñjayas called upon Arjuna and Vāsudeva. Arjuna spoke to Kṛshṇa about Karṇa; Kṛshṇa reminded him first to seek Yudhishṭhira (VIII, 64). Arjuna met with Bhīma and asked him to bring intelligence of Yudhishṭhira; Bhīma feared to incur the reproach of cowardice by leaving the battle; Arjuna went to Yudhishṭhira in the Pāṇḍava camp upon Bhīma agreeing to resist the Saṃçaptakas. Arjuna and Kṛshṇa found Yudhishṭhira lying on his bed; thinking that Karṇa had been slain (VIII, 65), Yudhishṭhira congratulated them (ιιι) (VIII, 66). Arjuna told Yudhishṭhira the real motive of his arrival in camp (κκκ), and swore to slay Karṇa and all the foes that very day (VIII, 67). Yudhishṭhira censured Arjuna, thinking that he had run away from the battle, leaving Bhīma unsupported (λλλ), several times invoking him to give up Gāṇḍīva to somebody else (VIII, 68). Arjuna drew his sword in order to strike off Yudhishṭhira's head in fulfilment of his vow about the person who would tell him to give up Gāṇḍīva (μμμ); Kṛshṇa addressed Arjuna on the nature of truth (νννν), relating the story of Balāka (f) and of Kauçika (g); Arjuna said he must keep his vow (ξξξ); Kṛshṇa suggested that Arjuna by insulting Yudhishṭhira, by addressing him as "thou," would be regarded as having slain him (ooo) (VIII, 69). Urged by Kṛshṇa, Arjuna insulted Yudhishṭhira in a long speech (ππππ); then he became despondent and desired to strike off his own head; Kṛshṇa urged him to utter his own praises, as self-praise is equal to self-destruction. Arjuna praised himself (ρρρ), and begged for Yudhishṭhira's forgiveness, promising to slay Karṇa and rescue Bhīma. Yudhishṭhira grieved, saying that Bhīmasena, not he, ought to be king. Kṛshṇa comforted Yudhishṭhira and induced him to forgive both himself and Arjuna (σσσ) (VIII, 70). Speeches of Kṛshṇa, Arjuna, and Yudhishṭhira on the same topic (τττ) (VIII, 71). Arjuna proceeded to slay Karṇa, having obtained Yudhishṭhira's leave; commanded by Kṛshṇa, Dāruka had equipped the chariot. Auspicious omens. Kṛshṇa addressed Arjuna in order to raise his spirits (vvv) (VIII, 72); continuation (vvv) (VIII, 73). Arjuna's cheerful reply to Kṛshṇa (φφφ) (VIII, 74). Requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra (χχχ), Sañjaya related: Description of the battle; Arjuna slew many. Kṛpa & Çikhaṇḍin; Sātyaki & Duryodhana; Çrutaçravas & Açvatthāman; Yudhāmanyu & Citrasena; the Sṛñjaya Uttamaujas & Karṇa's son Susheṇa; Sahadeva & the Gāndhāra king Çakuni; Nakula's son Çatānīka & Karṇa's son Vṛshasena; Nakula & Kṛtavarman; the Pāñcāla king Dhṛshṭadyumna & Karṇa; Duḥçāsana (with the Saṃçaptakas in the Bharata army) & Bhīma. Uttamaujas slew Susheṇa. Karṇa & Uttamaujas, who had his steeds slain, slew the steeds of Kṛpa, etc., and ascended the chariot of Çikhaṇḍin. Çikhaṇḍin did not wish to strike Kṛpa while the latter had no chariot: Açvatthāman rescued Kṛpa. Bhīma scorched the Kuru troops with his arrows (VIII, 75). The Bharata host fled before Bhīma, who said to his charioteer Viçoka that he was anxious about Arjuna and Yudhishṭhira; requested by Bhīma, Viçoka took an estimate of his weapons. Bhīma once more addressed Viçoka, saying that he would that day slay all the Kurus or himself succumb, etc. (ψψψ). Viçoka pointed out to Bhīma that Arjuna was returning to battle (ωωω). Bhīma promised to give Viçoka fourteen villages, 100 female slaves, and twenty chariots for this agreeable intelligence (VIII, 76). Arjuna and Bhīma attacked the Kaurava army with great vigour (description). Duryodhana told his troops to slay Bhīma, who made a formidable carnage among them (description). Çakuni (urged by Duryodhana) + his brothers & Bhīma; Çakuni was brought away by Duryodhana, who retreated; the troops fled away to Karṇa (VIII, 77). Requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra (α'), Sañjaya related: In the afternoon Karṇa assailed the Somakas, and Bhīma the Dhārtarāshṭra troops. Karṇa assailed the Pāñcālas, etc. (β'); the Pāṇḍavas encompassed him on all sides; Çikhaṇḍin, etc. (γ'), & Karṇa, who vanquished them. Cedis and Matsyas & Karṇa, who checked them; D., Si., and Cā. were gratified; the Pāṇḍava troops fled, and were attacked by the Dhārtarāshṭra archers. Duryodhana rejoiced; Duryodhana, etc. (δ'), slew the Pāṇḍava warriors; similarly the Pāṇḍava heroes Dhṛshṭadyumna, etc. (ε'), made an onslaught on the Kurus (VIII, 78). Arjuna produced a river of blood (description). Requested by Arjuna (ζ'), Kṛshṇa took him to Karṇa, whom Çalya informed (η'), and who answered Çalya (η'). Requested by Karṇa, Duryodhana, etc. (θ'), in order to open up a path for Karṇa to Arjuna, speedily proceeded and attacked Arjuna, who caused a great onslaught; Açvatthāman & Kṛpa and Kṛtavarman & Arjuna, who vanquished them. Çikhaṇḍin, etc. (ι'), proceeding towards Arjuna, checked the foes; the Kurus and Sṛñjayas slew one another (VIII, 79). Arjuna (avoiding Karṇa) proceeded to the rescue of Bhīma and slew the assailants of Bhīma; the Kurus fled; Arjuna informed Bhīma that Yudhishṭhira was well, and then proceeded; he was surrounded by ten sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra (who were all Duḥçāsana's juniors in age), whom he slew (VIII, 80). Arjuna was assailed by ninety Saṃçaptakas as he was proceeding towards Karṇa's chariot; he slew them. Many Kauravas attacked him, whom he destroyed. Then he was attacked by a force of Mlecchas, riding 1,300 elephants, commanded by Duryodhana. Arjuna made a heavy onslaught. Abandoning the small remnant of Kauravas, Bhīmasena rushed towards Arjuna and also destroyed this remnant; then he followed Arjuna in his rear; Karṇa was deserted by his troops; the sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra repaired to Karṇa. Karṇa attacked the Pāñcālas (VIII, 81); Karṇa felled Janamejaya's driver and steeds, and cut off the bows of Çatānīka and Sutasoma; Karṇa & Dhṛshṭadyumna, etc. (κ'); Ugrakarman (the commander of the Kaikeya division) & Karṇa's son Prasena; Karṇa slew Ugrakarman; Prasena & Sātyaki, who slew him; Karṇa & Sātyaki + Çikhaṇḍin; Karṇa slew Dhṛshṭadyumna's son and attacked Sutasoma. Kṛshṇa urged Arjuna to slay Karṇa; Arjuna proceeded with Bhīmasena; Uttamaujas, etc. (λ'), & Karṇa (grinding the Somakas), who vanquished them; they were rescued by the Draupadeyas; Sātyaki & Duryodhana + Kṛpa, etc. (μ'); Duḥçāsana & Bhīma (VIII, 82). Bhīma (addressing Karṇa, etc.) (μ') slew Duḥçāsana and drank his blood in the very sight of Duryodhana and Karṇa; the bystanders, with Karṇa's brother Citrasena, fled away, thinking Bhīma to be a Rā.; Yudhāmanyu, etc., pursued Citrasena; Citrasena (turning back) was slain by him; Karṇa (putting the Pāṇḍava host to flight) & Nakula; Bhīmasena took up a little of Duḥçāsana's blood and drank it (ν'), addressing Kṛshṇa and Arjuna and vowing soon to slay Duryodhana (VIII, 83). Ten of Dhṛtarāshṭra's sons (ξ') & Bhīma, who slew them. Karṇa was afraid, but was encouraged by Çalya (ο'). Karṇa's son Vṛshasena & Bhīma + Nakula, who had his white steeds of the Vanāyu breed slain by him, and sprang upon Bhīma's chariot in the sight of Arjuna; urged by Bhīma and Nakula, Arjuna proceeded towards Vṛshasena (VIII, 84). Eleven warriors (π') + the Kulindas (upon elephants, born in Himālayan regions) & Kṛtavarman, etc. (ρ'); the Kulinda prince & Kṛpa, who slew him; the younger brother of the Kulinda prince & Kṛpa + the Gāndhāra king, who slew the Kulinda; the Kurus & the Pāṇḍus & Sṛñjayas; the Bhoja chief Kṛtavarman & Çatānīka; Açvatthāman slew three elephants; the third brother of the Kulinda chief & Duryodhana; the Kulinda, mounting another elephant, & Krātha, who was slain; Vṛka & the same Kulinda, whose elephant crushed him; the son of Babhru & the same elephant + Sahadeva's son; Babhru fell down; the same Kulinda & Çakuni (the Gāndhāra chief), who slew him; Nakula's son Çatānīka (who slew elephants, etc.) & a Kulinda warrior [on the Kaurava side], who was slain by him; Karṇa's son Vṛshasena & Çatānīka + Arjuna, etc. (σ'); Arjuna, informing Karṇa and all the other Kurus headed by Duryodhana and Açvatthāman that he would slay Vṛshasena and then Karṇa, as Bhīma would slay Duryodhana, slew Vṛshasena; Karṇa & Arjuna (+Kṛshṇa) (VIII, 85); Kṛshṇa addressed Arjuna (τ'); Arjuna's reply (υ') (VIII, 86); description of Arjuna and Karṇa (φ'); all the inhabitants of the world were heard to differ amongst themselves: D., Dā., G., Pç., the Snakes, Rā.; As., Yātudhānas, Gh., etc., sided with Karṇa; the Vedas, etc. (χ'), with Arjuna; the smaller snakes all sided with Karṇa; V., M., Sā., R., V.-D., A., Agni, etc. (χ'), sided with Arjuna, while all Ā. sided with Karṇa; the Vaiçyas, etc. (ψ'), sided with Karṇa; P., etc. (χ'), with Arjuna; the Pretas, Pç., Rā., etc., with Karṇa; D.-ṛ., B.-ṛ., R.-ṛ. with Arjuna, as also G. headed by Tumburu. With the Prādheyas and Mauneyas, G. and Aps., and many wise sages, having for their vehicles wolves, etc., came in order to witness the encounter that was also witnessed by D., Dā., G., N., Y., etc., M.-ṛ., P. (subsisting upon svadhā), etc., and Brahmán with B.-ṛ. and Prajāpatis and Bhava. Indra wished that Arjuna should vanquish Karṇa; Sūrya that Karṇa should vanquish Arjuna. The gods urged Brahmán that the success of both should be equal, Indra that Arjuna and Kṛshṇa should win; Brahmán and Içāna (i.e. Çiva) said that the victory of Arjuna was certain (ω'); "let Karṇa obtain identity with V. or M.; let him with Droṇa and Bhīshma be worshipped in heaven." Indra acquiesced in their words. Description of Karṇa's and Arjuna's chariots. The ape on Arjuna's banner attacked the elephant's rope on Karṇa's banner. Kṛshṇa and Çalya cast keen glances at each other, and so did Arjuna and Karṇa. Karṇa asked Çalya what he would do if he was slain; Çalya said that then he would slay both Kṛshṇa and Arjuna; similarly asked by Arjuna, Kṛshṇa said that Karṇa could not slay Arjuna; if so, the destruction of the universe would be at hand, and he would himself slay Karṇa and Çalya. Arjuna said that that very day the wives of Karṇa would become widows (αα') (VIII, 87). In the welkin D., N., As., Si., Y., G., Rā., Aps., B.-ṛ., etc., looked on. The battle commenced. Duryodhana, etc. (αβ'), & Arjuna (+Kṛshṇa); Arjuna defeated all of them; floral showers fell, etc.; Açvatthāman told Duryodhana to make peace (αγ'), but in vain (αδ'); Duryodhana urged his troops (VIII, 88); description of the battle between Arjuna and Karṇa; Arjuna employed an Āgneya weapon, which was quenched by Karṇa with a Vāruṇa weapon by means of clouds, which Arjuna dispelled by a Vāyavya weapon; Arjuna employed the Aindra weapon (? astraṃ dayitaṃ devarājñaḥ), Karṇa the Bhārgava weapon. The Pāñcālas and Somakas & Karṇa, who slew them. Seeing Arjuna's weapons baffled by Karṇa, Bhīma urged Arjuna to put forth his strength (αε'), and so did Kṛshṇa (αζ'). Arjuna bowed to Brahmán and invoked the Brāhma weapon, which could be applied by the wind alone; Karṇa baffled it; urged by Bhīma, Arjuna applied a second Brāhma weapon, which caused a great carnage among the Kaurava troops (description). Karṇa & Bhīmasena, etc. (αη'). Arjuna shot at Karṇa and Çalya, and slew Sabhāpati, etc. The Kauravas urged Karṇa to slay Arjuna. Yudhishṭhira appeared in order to witness the encounter. Arjuna's bowstring broke; Karṇa took advantage of the interval to hit Arjuna, etc. (αθ'). Karṇa employed as arrows five snakes that had sided with Takshaka's son [i.e. Açvasena, at Khāṇḍava]; they penetrated Kṛshṇa's body, entered the earth, and, having bathed [in Bhogavatī], returned to Karṇa, but were cut off by Arjuna, who then covered Karṇa's chariot with showers of arrows and slew 2,000 Kurus, who had been urged by Duryodhana to fight. The Kurus fled, leaving Karṇa to fight singly with Arjuna (VIII, 89). Karṇa baffled Arjuna's weapon; Karṇa and Arjuna shot at each other dense showers of arrows. The snake Açvasena, who was hostile to Arjuna, was passing his time in the nether region, having escaped from the conflagration at Khāṇḍava; recollecting the death of his mother he now soared up and entered into Karṇa's quiver in the shape of an arrow. Karṇa and Arjuna were fanned and sprinkled with fragrant sandal water by many Aps. staying in the welkin, and Çakra and Sūrya with their hands gently brushed their faces. Karṇa aimed that arrow, born in Airāvata's race (i.e. the snake in the shape of an arrow), which he had long kept for Arjuna's destruction, and which lay singly in a golden quiver amid sandal dust; omens appeared, and the Lokapālas with Çakra raised loud wails. Karṇa did not know that the snake Açvasena had entered his arrow by the aid of his yoga powers. Çalya in vain exhorted Karṇa to take another arrow; Karṇa said: "Karṇa never aims an arrow twice; persons like us never become crooked warriors." Kṛshṇa with his feet pressed Arjuna's chariot about a cubit into the earth, and the snake-arrow, failing to strike off Arjuna's head, broke his diadem (made by Svayambhū for Indra > Arjuna), incapable of being crushed by Rudra, etc. (αι'). Celestial flowers were showered upon Kṛshṇa, etc. Açvasena appeared to Karṇa and asked him to shoot the same weapon again; Karṇa refused to avail himself of another's help or shoot the same shaft twice. Açvasena then, of his own accord, rushed on Arjuna in the shape of an arrow; Kṛshṇa informed Arjuna that it was Açvasena, who, as an unborn child, was saved with his mother at Khāṇḍava. Arjuna cut the snake into pieces, and Kṛshṇa with his arms raised the chariot from the earth. Once, when Karṇa was stupefied and stood inactive, Arjuna was disinclined to slay him in such distress, but he was taught by Kṛshṇa never to spare an enemy, however weak. At that time, when the hour of Karṇa's death had come, Kāla, approaching invisibly, in consequence of the brahman's wrath, said "the earth is swallowing up thy wheel," and the weapon that Rāma had given him escaped from his memory, and the earth engulfed his left wheel. Karṇa began to rail at righteousness as not always protecting its worshippers. Karṇa invoked the Brāhma weapon, and Arjuna the Aindra weapon, which was baffled by Karṇa; urged by Kṛshṇa to "shoot high weapons," Arjuna shot the Brāhma weapon. Karṇa cut off, one after another, eleven bowstrings of Arjuna's, not knowing that Arjuna had one hundred strings to his bow; urged by Kṛshṇa to strike Karṇa with "superior weapons," Arjuna then consecrated another celestial weapon with mantras, uniting the Raudra weapon with it. At that time the earth swallowed up one of Karṇa's wheels. Quickly alighting, Karṇa seized his sunken wheel with his two arms and endeavoured to lift it up; the earth rose up to the height of four fingers breadth, with her seven islands, etc.; Karṇa shed tears from wrath and asked Arjuna to wait for a moment till he had lifted his sunken wheel (VIII, 90). Kṛshṇa taunted Karṇa for appealing to virtue and the rules of fair fight by reminding him of all the wrongs done to the Pāṇḍavas by himself and Duryodhana acting according to his counsels (αι'). Karṇa dropped his head in shame and gave no answer, and continued to fight. Kṛshṇa urged Arjuna to pierce Karṇa with a celestial weapon; Arjuna, remembering the incidents alluded to by Kṛshṇa, blazed up with fury; blazing flames of fire seemed to emanate from all the pores of his body, a sight that appeared exceedingly wonderful. Both Karṇa and Arjuna invoked the Brāhma weapon, and Karṇa once more made an effort to extricate his chariot. Arjuna shot an Agni weapon, quenched by Karṇa with a Vāruṇa weapon, covering all the points of the compass with darkness, which Arjuna dispelled with the Vāyavya weapon. Pierced by a shaft of Karṇa's, while the earth trembled, etc., Arjuna began to reel, the Gāṇḍīva dropped from his hand, etc. At the interval Karṇa fruitlessly endeavoured to extricate his chariot. Recovering his senses, Arjuna took up an añjalika weapon. Urged by Kṛshṇa to cut off the head of Karṇa, Arjuna cut off his standard, and then, with an añjalika weapon (the Ṛ. loudly crying out "peace be to the universe"), struck off Karṇa's head before Karṇa could mount his chariot. A light issued from Karṇa's body and entered the Sun. The Pāṇḍavas rejoiced (αλ') (VIII, 91). Duryodhana, etc., grieved; Bhīma, uttering loud roars, frightened the Kauravas, etc. (αμ'). Çalya informed Duryodhana of Karṇa's death (αν'). Duryodhana became almost deprived of his senses (VIII, 92). Requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra, Sañjaya related the state of the Kaurava army after Karṇa's fall (αξ'). Duryodhana resolved to make a final stand (αο'). Bhīmasena and Dhṛshṭadyumna (+ four kinds of forces) & Duryodhana (+ 25,000 warriors on foot, who were slain); Arjuna & the chariot force of the Kauravas; Nakula, etc. (απ'), & Çakuni; the Kurus fled away; Cekitāna, etc. (αρ'), blew their conches. Duryodhana challenged all the Pāṇḍavas and fought with them with great valour; he rallied the remnants of his troops and exhorted them to fight (ασ'); they fled away heedless of his words (VIII, 93). Çalya described to Duryodhana the carnage on the field (ατ'), and urged the withdrawal of the troops to their nightly quarters.

Having repeatedly comforted Duryodhana, they retired headed by Açvatthāman. Karṇa did not lose his splendour. D., Ṛ., etc., retired. The portents that were seen at Karṇa's fall. Arjuna and Kṛshṇa blew their conches, at which the Kauravas left the field, deserting Çalya and Duryodhana. D., G., men, Cā., M.-ṛ., Y., and M.-U. congratulated Kṛshṇa and Arjuna (VIII, 94). Enumeration of the Kauravas retiring from the field (αν'). Urged by Kṛshṇa (αφ'), who told Dhṛshṭadyumna, etc. (αχ'), to stand there with care, Arjuna presented himself to Yudhishṭhira, who, rising from his bed, greeted Arjuna and Kṛshṇa; Kṛshṇa congratulated Yudhishṭhira (αψ'), who ascribed his success to Kṛshṇa's influence (αω'). Yudhishṭhira, with Kṛshṇa and Arjuna, came back to the field to have a look at Karṇa's body. The kings, filled with joy, approached Yudhishṭhira and gladdened him greatly; so Nakula, etc. (βα'). Dhṛtarāshṭra and Gāndhārī swooned away and were comforted by Vidura, Sañjaya, and the Kuru ladies. [Khaḍgotpattikathana(ṃ)] (the narrative of the origin of the sword). § 656 (cf. Āpaddh.): Nakula (b) questioned Bhīshma as to which (the sword or the bow) is really the foremost of weapons, and how the sword was first created and for what purpose, and who was the first instructor in the use of that weapon. Bhīshma related that in ancient times the universe was one vast expanse of water, enveloped in darkness, etc. There Pitāmaha (i.e. Brahmán) took his birth, he then created wind, fire, etc., and then assuming a visible form he begot Marīci, etc. (a) [and Pracetas; the last begot] Daksha (c). When Sarvaloka-pitāmaha (i.e. Brahmán) had called into existence all creatures he promulgated the eternal religion laid down in the Vedas. That religion was accepted by the gods with their preceptors and priests, and by Ā., V., R., S., M., A., Bhṛgu, Atri, Aṅgiras, Si., the Kāçyapas, Vasishṭha, etc. (β); all of them lived in obedience to Brahmán. But the foremost of the Dānavas, Hiraṇyakaçipu, etc. (γ), and many other Daityas and Dānavas, filled with wrath and covetousness, took delight in all kinds of wicked acts, etc., wielding only the rod of chastisement; those foremost of Asuras forsook every kindly intercourse with other creatures. Then Brahmán with the Brahmarshis proceeded to a delightful summit of Himavat, and after 1,000 years he arranged a sacrifice. From the sacrificial fire arose Asi ("the sword") (d), which Brahmán gave to Rudra (i.e. Çiva) in order to enable him to put down irreligion. Rudra (description) with the sword destroyed and dispersed the Asuras (Dānavas); some of them penetrated into the bowels of the earth, others got under the cover of the mountains, some went upwards, others entered the depths of the sea. Rudra then gave the sword to Vishṇu, Vishṇu to Marīci, Marīci to the maharshis, the maharshis to Vāsava (i.e. Indra), Mahendra (i.e. Indra) to the lokapālas, the lokapālas to Manu (e) the son of Sūrya. He gave it to his son Kshupa. Thence it passed successively to Ikshvāku, etc. (δ), from Droṇa to Kṛpa, from Kṛpa to thee (Nakula) and thy brothers. Kṛttikāḥ is the nakshatra of the sword, Agni its deity, Rohiṇī its gotra, Rudra its high preceptor. Its eight mysterious names are Asi, etc. (ε). Of all weapons the sword is the foremost; the Purāṇas truly declare that it was first wielded by Maheçvara (i.e. Çiva). Pṛthu (Vainya) (f) created the first bow. Persons skilled in weapons should always worship the sword. Blessing to the reader (XII, 166).

Khāṇḍavadāha ("the burning of the Khāṇḍava forest"): § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 316 (°ākhyaṃ parva, i.e. Khāṇḍavadahanaparvan).

[Khāṇḍavadahanaparvan(°va)], the 19th of the minor parvans, in C., including also Mayadarçanaparvan, in all I, 222–34 (cf. Khāṇḍavadāha). § 254: At the instance of Dhṛtarāshṭra and Bhīshma the Pāṇḍavas at Indraprastha began to bring other kings under their sway. All the subjects lived happily. Once, in the summer, Arjuna and Kṛshṇa sported on the banks of the Yamunā with Draupadī and Subhadrā, etc. They were then approached by a brahman, whose complexion was like molten gold (I, 222). It was Agni. He asked them to help him to consume the forest of Khāṇḍava and the creatures therein; for Indra always prevented him from consuming it, because he was a friend of the Nāga Takshaka, who dwelt there with his followers and family.—§§ 255–6, a (Agniparābhava, q.v.): the antecedents of the Khāṇḍavad. (I, 223, 224).—§ 256, b: Arjuna said that he wanted a stronger bow and inexhaustible arrows, and a resplendent chariot to ride in, and that Kṛshṇa needed a weapon with which he could slay Nāgas and Piçācas (I, 224).—§ 257: Then Agni thought of Varuṇa (b), who presented Arjuna with: (1) the Gāṇḍīva bow (c); (2) two inexhaustible quivers; (3) a chariot yoked with horses. Then Agni gave to Kṛshṇa: (1) a discus (Sudarçana) (d). Varuṇa, after this, gave to Kṛshṇa: (2) the mace Kaumodakī (e). They were then ready to fight, and Agni began to consume the forest (I, 225).—§ 258: Arjuna and Kṛshṇa prevented the creatures from escaping. Even the gods became afraid and applied to Indra. Indra poured down showers of rain, that were at first dried up in the sky by the heat of the fire (I, 226). When more rain was poured down, Arjuna dispelled it with a shower of his weapons. Takshaka was not present, having gone to Kurukshetra. But his son Açvasena was there; his mother, a she-snake, attempted to swallow him, but had her head cut off by Arjuna; Indra, raising a violent wind, for a moment deprived Arjuna of his consciousness, during which time Açvasena effected his escape, being cursed by Kṛshṇa, Arjuna, and Agni ("never shalt thou be famous"). Indra assailed Arjuna with clouds, which were dispersed by the Vāyavya weapon, and with a shower of stones, and with a peak from the Mandara, but in vain. Garutmat (Garuḍa) and other birds, and Nāgas, who also assailed Kṛshṇa and Arjuna, were vanquished; and As., G., Y., Rā., and Nāgas were defeated by Arjuna, as were the Dai. and Dā. by Kṛshṇa with his discus. They were also attacked by Yama with his death-dealing mace, Kubera with his spiked club, Varuṇa with his noose and beautiful missile, Skanda with his long lance, the Açvins with resplendent plants, Dhātṛ with his bow, Jaya with a thick club, Tvashṭṛ with a huge mountain, Sūrya with a bright çakti, Mṛtyu with a battle-axe, Aryaman with a bludgeon furnished with sharp spikes, Mitra with a discus sharp as a razor, Pūshan, Bhaga, Savitṛ, R., V., M., V.-D., and S. (I, 227). With his discus Kṛshṇa slaughtered Pç., N., Rā., Dā., As., etc. The gods retired from the scene. Indra became filled with joy and applauded Kṛshṇa and Arjuna. An incorporeal voice addressed him, saying that Takshaka was in Kurukshetra, and that Kṛshṇa and Arjuna, being the old ṛshis and gods Nara and Nārāyaṇa, were invincible, and that the destruction of the forest of Khāṇḍava had been ordained by fate. Then also Indra went back to heaven. The Vidyādharas, etc., dwelling in that forest, all became frightened. Agni, drinking the nectar-like stream of animal fat, became filled with joy. When the Asura Maya, the brother of Namuci, was about to be slain by Kṛshṇa and burnt by Agni, Arjuna rescued him. Agni burnt the forest for fifteen days, sparing only six of its dwellers: Açvasena, Maya, and four çārṅgakas (a sort of birds, Nīl.) (I, 228).—§ 259 (Çārṅgakopākhyāna, q.v.): I, 229, 1 – 234, 4, (8331–8464).—§ 260: When Agni had consumed fat, marrow, and flesh in abundance, and burnt the forest for fifteen days, he became gratified and extinguished himself. Indra, with M., appeared before Kṛshṇa and Arjuna, and granted them a boon. Arjuna asked him to give him all his weapons (both the Āgneya and the Vāyavya), and Indra promised to give them when Mahādeva had been pleased with him. To Kṛshṇa he granted that his friendship with Arjuna should be eternal. Then he ascended to heaven with the celestials. Arjuna, Vāsudeva, and the Dānava Maya, having wandered a little, sat down on the bank of a river (I, 234).

[Kīcakavadhaparvan] ("the slaughter of the Kīcakas"), the 54th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr. § 551: The Pāṇḍavas thus passed ten months in Matsya's city. As the year was about to expire, Kīcaka, the senāpati and brother-in-law of Virāṭa, became enamoured of Kṛshṇā, who rebuked him and warned him of the Gandharvas, her husbands (IV, 14). Then he caused Sudeshṇā (Kaikeyī) to send Kṛshṇā to him to fetch wine. Kṛshṇā adored the Sun, who commanded a Rākshasa to protect her invisibly (IV, 15). As Kīcaka seized her, she dashed him to the ground and rushed to Yudhishṭhira, followed by Kīcaka, who brought her down and seized her by the hair, but the Rākshasa gave him a push, so that he fell down senseless. Yudhishṭhira, apprehensive of discovery, commanded Bhīmasena to forbear. Kṛshṇā rebuked Virāṭa and was praised by the courtiers, but sent back to Sudeshṇā by Yudhishṭhira: "the Gandharvas will surely dispel thy woe." Sudeshṇā said: "I shall cause Kīcaka to be slain, if thou wishest it." Kṛshṇā answered: "Even others will slay him" (IV, 16). Kṛshṇā rose up at night and proceeded to Bhīmasena (IV, 17), and complained of their plight and especially that of Sahadeva (b) (IV, 18–21). Bhīmasena exhorted her to endure a little longer, reminding her of Sukanyā, Indrasenā (c), Sītā, Lopāmudrā, and Sāvitrī (IV, 21), and said: "To-morrow evening you should manage to have a meeting with Kīcaka in the dancing hall, but so that others may not espy thee." Kīcaka came to the rendezvous and was slain by Bhīmasena, and Kṛshṇā said to the keepers of the dancing-hall: "Kīcaka has been slain by my Gandharva husbands" (IV, 22). Kīcaka's relatives obtained permission from Virāṭa to cremate Kṛshṇā with him, and carried her towards the burning-place. She cried "Jaya", etc. (a). Bhīmasena hearing it, came and slew 105 of them with a tree (IV, 23). Virāṭa got afraid and caused Sudeshṇā to ask Kṛshṇā to leave the country, but she obtained permission to remain for thirteen days (IV, 24).

Kirīṭitanayātmaja ("the grandson of Kirīṭin [i.e. Arjuna]") = Parikshit: XIV, 1975.

Kirmīra, a Rākshasa. § 11 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 11, 425 (°sya vadhaḥ cātra, cf. § 316).—§ 315 (Maitreyaçāpa): III, 10, 368 (Rakshasaḥ, had been slain by Bhīmasena), 382, 384 (°vadha°). — § 316 (Kirmīravadhap.): III, 11, 385 (°sya vadhaḥ), 407 (ahaṃ Bakasya vai bhrātā K°a iti viçrutaḥ), 412, 431, 454 (is slain by Bhīmasena), 460 (Rakshasāṃ varaṃ).—§ 600 (Ghaṭotkacavadhap.): VII, 176, 8007 (kinsman of Alāyudha), 8010 (Hiḍimba-Baka-K°ā nihatā mama bāndhavāḥ, says Alāyudha); 180δδδ*, †8211 (Rākshasendrā Hiḍimba-K°-Bakapradhānāḥ); 181, 8235 (Hiḍimba-Baka-K°ā Bhīmasenena pātitāḥ).

Kirmīravadha ("the killing of Kirmīra"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 319 (i.e. Kirmīravadhaparvan).

Kirmīravadhaparvan(°va) ("the section relating to the killing of Kirmīra," the 31st of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Kirmīravadha). § 316: Vidura had heard it from the Pāṇḍavas and now related it to Dhṛtarāshṭra. Departing from Hāstinapura and travelling for three days and nights the Pāṇḍavas reached the Kāmyaka wood. At midnight a man-eating rākshasa, Kirmīra, brother of Baka and friend of Hiḍimba, obstructed their path with a lighted brand, and would avenge himself on Bhīma. Kṛshṇā was afraid. Dhaumya destroyed his illusion by rākshasa-destroying mantras. Arjuna stringed his bow Gāṇḍīva; but Bhīma, making him desist, fought with trees, etc., against Kirmīra, as the brothers Vāli and Sugrīva had done of yore for the same woman. At last Bhīma seized him with his arms and whirled him about and killed him. Then placing Kṛshṇā in their front they set out for Dvaitavana. Having cleared the forest of its pest they began to live there. "Passing through the forest, I saw the body of the rākshasa, and heard the story from the brahmans" (III, 11).

Kīrti ("fame," personif.), a goddess. § 115 (Aṃçāvat.): I, 66, 2578 (daughter of Daksha and wife of Dharma).—§ 270 (Brahmasabhāv.): II, 11, 458 (in the palace of Brahmán).—§ 330 (Indradarçana): III, 37, 1488.

Kīrtimat[1]. § 641 (Rājadh.): XII, 59, 2211 (son of Virajas and father of Kardama).

Kīrtimat[2], a Viçvadeva. § 749 (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 91γ, 4356 (enumeration).

Kīrtivarman, a Pāṇḍava warrior. § 600 (Ghaṭotkacavadhap.): VII, 158χ, 7009.

Kīrtyāvāsa = Mahāpurusha (Mahāpurushastava).

Kishkindhā, a city. § 281 (Sahadeva): II, 31, 1122 (at K. Sahadeva fought with the monkey-kings Dvivida and Mainda).—§ 531 (Rāmopākhyānap.): III, 280, 16107 (C. °dhyāṃ), 16108 (do.), 16131 (do., the capital of Sugrīva and Vālin).—§ 534 (Hanūmatpratyāgamana): III, 282, 16201, 16203, 16209.—§ 543 (Rāmābhisheka): III, 291, 16587, 16588.

Kishkindhyā, v. Kishkindhā.

Kīṭa ("the worm"). § 762*b* (Kīṭop.): XIII, 117-19, 5728 (Dvaipāyanasya saṃvādaṃ kīṭasya), 5729, 5730, (5732), 5735, etc.

Kīṭaka, a prince. § 130 (Aṃçāvat.): I, 67, 2696 (among the incarnations from the Krodhavaça gaṇa).

Kitava[1] = Çakuni: I, 412 (Ç°); VII, 1504 (Gāndhārarājaḥ).

Kitava[3] = Ulūka: V, 5694 (the çloka is wanting in B.).

Kitava, pl. (°āḥ), a people. § 295 (Dyūtap.): II, 51, 1832 (brought tribute to Yudhishṭhira).—§ 586 (Bhīshmavadhap.): VI, 106τ, 4808 (protect Bhīshma).—§ 587 (do.): VI, 119aa*, 5648 (abandon Bhīshma).—§ 589 (Droṇābhishekap.): VII, 7ζ, 184 (in the army of Duryodhana).

[Kīṭopākhyāna] ("the episode relating to the worm"). § 762*b* (Ānuçāsanik.). Bhīshma said: In days of old, when the emancipated (Brahmabhūtaḥ) brahman Vyāsa roamed over the world, he saw a worm speedily moving on a chariot-road. Asked by Vyāsa, who was omniscient and knew the language of every animal, the worm said that it was running away from a large cart, lest it should be killed; every creature, in whatever situation it may be placed, becomes attached to it; "in even this order of being I am happy, I think, and wish to live"; in his former life he was a cruel Çūdra, a usurer, etc., never dedicating food to D. and P., etc. (description); he now was filled with repentance and grief; he had, however, worshipped his old mother, and once showed hospitality to a brahman; in consequence thereof the memory had not forsaken him, and he thought he should once more regain happiness (XIII, 117). Vyāsa said: "It is the consequence of a meritorious act of mine that thou art not stupefied; in consequence of my penances I am able to rescue a being of demerit by the simply granting him sight of my person; there is no stronger power than that of penances. Thou mayst again attain to righteousness and merit; the state of a worm is really fraught with great misery. The superior brahman worships the Sun and the Moon uttering mantras; when thou hast attained to that state, I shall impart to thee Bráhman." The worm remained and was killed by the cart. He was reborn in diverse orders of being, such as a porcupine, Iguana, boar, deer, bird, Cāṇḍāla, Çūdra, and Vaiçya. Born at last as a Kshatriya (with Kāmboja steeds, Sūtas and Māgadhas, etc.; description) through the grace of Vyāsa, he came and worshipped him. Vyāsa said that the sin of his former life had yet not been destroyed; he should become a brahman by giving up his life on the field of battle for the sake of cows or brahmans; performing many sacrifices he should attain to heaven, and after emancipation (Brahma-bhūtaḥ) he should enjoy eternal happiness. The ascending order of transmigration is: († v. 5774) animal > Çūdra > Vaiçya > Kshatriya > Brahman > Svarga (XIII, 118). He betook himself to severe austerities; Vyāsa went to him and said that the penances of the Kshatriyas consist in the protection of all creatures; thereby he should attain to the state of a brahman. Then he protected his subjects righteously, and after death became a brahman. Vyāsa came and told him not to fear death, but only the loss of righteousness. He caused the earth to be marked with 100 sacrificial stakes, and then obtained a residence in the region of Brahmán himself, and obtained the eternal Bráhman by his own acts, according to the words of Vyāsa. Also the Kshatriyas, who have been slain [on the field of Kurukshetra], have attained to a meritorious end (gatiṃ puṇyāṃ); therefore, do not mourn on their account" (XIII, 119).

Koçā, a river. § 574 (Jambūkh.): VI, 9λ, 342 (so C., B. has Koshāṃ).

Having smashed the Gāndhāras and vanquished the sons of Nagnajit he forcibly liberated king Sudarçana from confinement. He slew the Pāṇḍya king by striking his breast (kapāṭena (?), v. the note of PCR., p. 174) and mowed down the Kaliṅgas in battle. The city of Vārāṇasī was burned by K. and remained for many years without a king. Ekalavya, the king of the Nishādas, who could not be defeated by others, always used to challenge K. to battle, but slain by him he lay dead like the Asura Jambha violently thrashed on a hillock. Having Baladeva for his second he slew Ugrasena's wicked son (i.e. Kaṃsa) seated in court in the midst of the Vṛshṇis and the Andhakas, and then gave the kingdom to Ugrasena. He fought with Çālva, and at the gate of Saubha he with his hands caught the fierce çataghnī. The Asuras had a city named Prāgjyotisha, which was formidable, inaccessible, etc. It was there that Naraka Bhauma kept the ear-rings of Aditi, which he had stolen; the gods with Çakra (i.e. Indra) at their head were incapable of conquering him, and therefore employed K. to destroy these Asuras. At the city of Nirmocana K. slew 6,000 Asuras, and having cut their paçāḥ kshurāntāḥ, he slew Muru and crowds of Rākshasas (ogharakshaḥ, which by Nīl. is taken as a Rākshasa named Ogha), and then he entered that city. It was there that an encounter took place between Naraka and Vishṇu (i.e. Kṛshṇa); slain by K., Naraka lay lifeless like a karṇikāra-tree uprooted by the wind. When he had slain Naraka and Muru and recovered the ear-rings, K. came back and the gods granted him boons: "fatigue will never be thine in fight; neither the firmament nor the waters shall stop thy course, nor shall weapons penetrate thy body": V, 48, †1884, †1889, †1891 (Vishṇoḥ), †1892, †1894.—§ 561 (do.): V, 48, [†1895 (Vishṇuṃ)], †1896 (friend of the Pāṇḍavas).—§ 561*d* (Nara-Nārāyaṇau): V, 49, 1936 (K. is identical with Nārāyaṇa, Arjuna with Nara).—§ 561 (Yānasandhip.): V, [49, 1939 (*Çaṅkhacakragadāhastaṃ . . . [Kṛtaghnopākhyāna(ṃ)] ("the episode about an ungrateful person"). § 658*b* (Āpaddh.): Bhīshma related: Gautama, a brahman, belonging to the middle country, devoid of Vedic learning, entered a village desirous of obtaining charity. In that village lived a robber (dasyu), possessed of great wealth, devoted to the brahmans, etc. He gave to Gautama a piece of new cloth, a widowed (bhartrā virahitāṃ) young woman, and a house. Gautama lived happily in that village of aborigines (çabarālaye) for many years, helping the relatives of his wife, the female slave (dāsī). He began to practise archery, and went into the woods and killed wild cranes (cakrāṅgān), etc., in abundance, and became like one of the robbers. One day a brahman, devoted to the study of the Vedas, etc., and who did never accept any food if given by a Çūdra, came to the house of his ancient friend Gautama. Seeing Gautama, who resembled a cannibal, he exhorted him to abandon his sinful mode of life. Gautama, repenting, agreed to leave this village next morning with his guest, who passed the night there, refraining touching anything (though hungry) (XII, 168). Next morning, when the guest had left the house, Gautama proceeded towards the sea, having met with a caravan of merchants. The caravan was assailed by an infuriated elephant, but Gautama managed to escape, and fled towards the north, not knowing whither he proceeded, wandering alone in the forest like a kimpurusha. At last he reached a delightful forest, resembling the very woods of Nandana, and inhabited by Y. and K., adorned with Çālas, etc., with Bhāruṇḍas (having faces resembling those of human beings), Bhūliṅgas, etc. Under a delightful banyan-tree (description) he fell asleep; when the sun had set, the king of cranes, Nāḍījaṅgha or Rājadharman, Kaçyapa's son, the child of a celestial maiden (devakanyāsutaḥ), one of the daughters of Daksha (v. 6343), and possessed of great wisdom and a friend of Brahmán, came home from Brahmaloka. Exhausted with hunger and thirst, Gautama thought of slaying him. Nāḍījaṅgha welcomed Gautama, and asked him to stay with him till the next morning (XII, 169). He, who equalled Yama himself in his knowledge of duties, made for him a bed of the çāla flowers, and offered him large fishes from the Bhāgīrathī, etc. Learning that he was desirous of going to the sea in order to earn wealth, he, quoting Bṛhaspati as to the fourfold means of earning wealth, directed him in the morning to his friend, the chief of the Rākshasas, Virūpāksha, about 3 yojanas away. Gautama reached the city of Meruvraja (description), and was welcomed by Virūpāksha (XII, 170). Though not satisfied with Gautama's antecedents, Virūpāksha, because Gautama was a brahman, and for the sake of Rājadharman, entertained him with the 1,000 brahmans that were to be entertained in his house on the day of full moon of the Kārttika month (description). Some amongst them were selected to represent the V.-D., P., and the deities of fire. This he did every year on the Āshāḍhī and Māghī, and especially on the Kārttikī, after the expiry of the autumn, giving away gold, jewels, etc.; on this one day there was no fear of Rā. Gautama came away with much wealth, and returned to Rājadharman, who welcomed him. Having no food to live on by the way, he thought of slaying Rājadharman (XII, 171). This he did; having plucked off the feathers and the down, he roasted the flesh, and taking it up together with the gold he had brought, he quickly fled from the spot. The next day Virūpāksha became anxious because he had not for two mornings and two nights seen Rājadharman, who when returning from Brahmaloka every morning never went home without paying him a visit; he suspected that Gautama had slain him, and sent his son with other Rā. to inquire after him. Gautama was caught and brought to Meruvraja; as the Rā. refused to eat the flesh of that great sinner, he was hacked into pieces, which were given away to the robbers. But the very robbers, though cannibals, refused to eat the flesh of that vile man (XII, 172). Virūpāksha caused a funeral pyre, etc., to be made for Rājadharman. At that time the goddess Surabhi, the daughter of Daksha, appeared in the sky above the pyre; from her mouth froth mixed with milk fell upon the funeral pyre, and Rājadharman became revived. Indra came and related that once Rājadharman had absented himself from Brahmaloka and was cursed by Brahmán, who said that he should not die soon; "therefore he has come back to life." Asked by Rājadharman on behalf of his "dear friend Gautama", Indra sprinkled amṛta over Gautama, and restored him to life. Rājadharman embraced him with great joy, dismissed him with his wealth, and returned home. At the due hour he repaired to Brahmaloka and was honoured by Brahmán. Gautama begot many sinful children upon his Çūdrā wife. According to a heavy curse denounced upon him by the gods, he afterwards had to sink into a terrible hell for many years. "All this was recited to me formerly by Nārada."

Kurukshetrakathana(ṃ) ("relation of Kurukshetra"). § 615*kk* (Baladevat.): The Ṛ. said to Bala-Rāma: This Samantapañcaka is said to be the eternal northern altar of Prajāpati; there, in days of yore, the gods performed a great sacrifice. The R.-ṛ. Kuru had cultivated this field for many years; hence it came to be called Kurukeshetra ("the field of Kuru"). Requested by Bala-Rāma, the Ṛ. related: In days of yore Kuru was engaged in perseveringly tilling this field; requested by Indra, he said: "Those that will die upon this plain, shall proceed to regions of bliss after being cleansed of their sins." Çakra, ridiculing this, went back to heaven. This happened repeatedly. Indra summoned the gods, who asked him to stop Kuru by granting him a boon; "if men, by only dying there, were to come to heaven, without having performed sacrifices to us, our very existence would be endangered." Indra then came, and they agreed that Kuru should not toil any more; but those that would die there, having abstained from food, with all their senses awake, and those that would perish there in battle, should go straight to heaven. It was sanctioned by all the principal gods, headed by Brahmán, that on earth there should be no more sacred spot than this; those men that performed austere penances here would all, after laying down their bodies, go to Brahmán's abode; those who gave away their wealth here would soon have their wealth doubled; those who would reside constantly here would never have to behold the region of Yama; those kings that would perform great sacrifices here would reside as long in heaven as earth would last. Indra had himself composed a verse here and sang it: "The very dust of Kurukshetra . . . shall cleanse persons of wicked acts and carry them to heaven." The principal gods, brahmans, kings as Nṛga, etc., having performed costly sacrifices here, have, after abandoning their bodies, proceeded to heaven. The space between Tarantuka and Arantuka and the lakes of Rāma (Rāmahradānāṃ) and Macakruka (C. °kra°), this Kurukshetra-Samantapañcaka is called the northern altar of Prajāpati. All that Çakra said was approved by Brahmán, Vishṇu, and Maheçvara (IX, 53).

[Lokapālasabhākhyānaparvan] ("the section containing the description of the palaces of the Lokapālas," the 21st of the minor parvans of the Mahābhārata). (Cf. Lokapālasabhākhyāna.)—§ 265: While the Pāṇḍavas were sitting in that palace, with the great Gandharvas, there came unto them the devarshi Nārada (his accomplishments are enumerated at great length), having wandered over the different worlds, accompanied by the ṛshis Pārijāta, Raivata, Sumukta, and Saumya. Nārada informed Yudhishṭhira about religion, pleasure, and profit, in the form of questions about his conduct. By following his advice Yudhishṭhira conquered the whole earth (II, 5). Yudhishṭhira answered that he observed all those rules. Then he asked Nārada if he had ever seen a palace like his. Nārada (Brahmaṛshiḥ, v. 281) replied that no palace among men was like his, but that he would describe unto him the palaces of Pitṛrāja (i.e. Yama), Varuṇa, Indra, the dweller on Kailāsa (i.e. Kubera), and Brahmán, always worshipped by gods, Pitṛs and Sādhyas, etc. (II, 6).—§ 266: Çakrasabhāvarṇana (q.v.).—§ 267: Yamasabhāvarṇana (q.v.).—§ 268: Varuṇasabhāvarṇana (q.v.).—§ 269: Vaiçravaṇasabhāvarṇana (q.v.).—§ 270: Brahmasabhāvarṇana (q.v.).—§ 271: Yudhishṭhira said: It appears that almost all the monarchs are in the sabhā of Yama—the Nāgas, Daityas, rivers, and oceans in that of Varuṇa—the Yakshas, Guhyakas, Rākshasas, Gandharvas, Apsarases, and Çiva in that of Kubera—the great ṛshis, and gods, and çāstras in that of Pitāmaha (i.e. Brahmán); and in that of Çakra (i.e. Indra) gods, Gandharvas and various ṛshis, but only one king, the rājarshi Hariçcandra (b); this is explained by Nārada. Pāṇḍu, beholding the good fortune of Hariçcandra, had asked Nārada to tell Yudhishṭhira to subjugate the whole earth and then perform a rājasūya. Thereby also Pāṇḍu and his ancestors would go to the region of Indra. Brahmarakshases, that destroy the sacrifices, always look for opportunities of obstructing it. Then Nārada went away to the city of the Dāçārhas, accompanied by the ṛshis with whom he had come (II, 12).

[Mahāprasthānikaparvan] ("the section relating to the great journey to the other world," the 17th of the great and the 99th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Mahāprasthānika(ṃ) parva(n)).—§ 794: Janamejaya said: Having heard of the battle with iron clubs between the Vṛshṇis and Andhakas, and of Kṛshṇa's ascension to heaven, what did the Pāṇḍavas do? Vaiçampāyana said: Having heard the particulars of the great slaughter of the Vṛshṇis, Yudhishṭhira set his heart on leaving the world, saying to his brothers that it is Time that ripens every creature, of which they approved. He made the kingdom over to Yuyutsu and installed Parikshit as king in Hāstinapura, while Vajra ruled in Indraprastha. Then he offered oblations of water to Kṛshṇa, Rāma, and Vasudeva, etc., and çrāddhas to his deceased kinsmen, and fed Vyāsa, Nārada, Mārkaṇḍeya, and Yājñavalkya, and gave jewels, etc. (specification) to brahmans in honour of Kṛshṇa. Kṛpa was installed as the preceptor of Parikshit. Then he summoned his subjects and informed them of his intentions; they tried in vain to dissuade him. He and his brothers and Draupadī removed their ornaments and wore barks of trees; then they threw their sacred fires into the water. Then they set out on their journey: the five Pāṇḍavas, Draupadī, and a dog. Kṛpa, etc., stood around Yuyutsu; Ulūpī entered the waters of Gaṅgā; Citrāṅgada set out for Maṇipūra; the grandmothers of Parikshit surrounded him. Yudhishṭhira, etc., set out with their faces turned towards the east, devoting themselves to yoga, resolved to observe the religion of renunciation; Yudhishṭhira first, then the other Pāṇḍavas in the order of their birth, behind them all Draupadī; a dog followed them. They reached the sea of red water. Agni came, and mentioning the Khāṇḍava forest, etc. (a), he caused Arjuna to throw the Gāṇḍīva and his inexhaustible quivers into the water to be given back to Varuṇa. Then Agni disappeared. They now proceeded towards the south; then, by the northern coast of the salt sea, to the south-west; then towards the west, where they saw Dvārakā covered by the ocean; then to the north, observant of yoga, desirous of making a round of the whole earth (XVII, 1). They crossed Himavat, and beheld a vast desert of sand, and then Meru. Kṛshṇā dropped down; asked by Bhīmasena, Yudhishṭhira said that this was the consequence of her partiality for Arjuna. Then Sahadeva fell down; asked by Bhīmasena, Yudhishṭhira said it was because he never thought anybody his equal in wisdom. They went on. Nakula fell; asked by Bhīmasena, Yudhishṭhira said it was because he thought that nobody equalled him in beauty, though his righteousness was without blemish. Arjuna fell down; asked by Bhīmasena, Yudhishṭhira said that it was because Arjuna had said that he would consume all the foes in a single day, but did not accomplish it. Bhīmasena fell down; Yudhishṭhira told him it was because he was a great eater, and used to boast of his strength. Yudhishṭhira went on with the dog (XVII, 2). Indra came with a chariot, and asked Yudhishṭhira to ascend it for going to Heaven; Yudhishṭhira wanted to take Draupadī and his fallen brothers with him; Indra said they have already reached Heaven, where he will see them; Yudhishṭhira would have the dog to accompany him; † as Indra said there is no place in Heaven for persons with dogs, as the Krodhavaças take away all the merits of such persons, Yudhishṭhira refused to ascend the chariot. Then [the dog, transformed into] Dharma, said to Yudhishṭhira (†vv. 80–9) that he had formerly tested him in the Dvaitavana, where he had chosen the revival of Nakula, disregarding Bhīmasena and Arjuna, for doing good to his [step]mother; "there is no one in Heaven that is equal to thee." Then Dharma, Indra, M., A., D., D.-ṛ., causing Yudhishṭhira to ascend the chariot, proceeded to Heaven on their respective chariots. Nārada said that Yudhishṭhira was superior to all the R.-ṛ. there. Yudhishṭhira wished to proceed to where his brothers were; Indra, saying that his brothers had won regions of felicity, tried to persuade him to stay, beholding D.-ṛ. and Si.; Yudhishṭhira wished to be united with his brothers and Draupadī (XVII, 3).

Maitreya[2] = Sūrya: III, 157.

[Maitreya-bhikshā] ("the alms of Maitreya"). § 763*b* (Ānuçāsanik.): Bhīshma said: Once Vyāsa, while wandering in disguise, waited at Vārāṇasī upon Maitreya in the house of a loose woman (svairiṇīkule; so BR.; quite otherwise Nīl. and PCR.), and was fed by him with excellent food. As he smiled, Maitreya said that he did not see much difference between one that behaved as an ordinary person [such as Vyāsa] [and himself], [or generally] between one who is unemancipated and one who is emancipated, especially when [the latter, such as Maitreya] was distinguished by birth (pṛthag ācaratas tāta pṛthagātmasukhātmanoḥ | alpāntaram ahaṃ manye, viçishṭam api cānvayāt; cf. Nīl. and PCR.). Vyāsa said that he wondered that the Vedas should [seemingly] contain an untruth; for even a small gift (as, for instance, a little water given to a thirsty man) produces great results, and Maitreya had, by feeding Vyāsa, conquered many high regions of felicity, as one does [according to the Vedas, only] by great sacrifices. Gift is more auspicious than all sacred acts (XIII, 120). Maitreya, approving of the words of Vyāsa, praised the brahmans as the root of righteousness: "if the brahman be gratified, D. and P. also are gratified," referring to Ṛ. (XIII, 121). Vyāsa, saying that even the most atrocious sins are washed off by (gifts and) penances, recommended to him the duties of householders (XIII, 123).

[Maitreya-çāpa(ḥ)] ("the curse of Maitreya"). § 315 (Āraṇyak.). Vyāsa said that the ṛshi Maitreya would admonish Duryodhana. Maitreya came, having on a tīrthayātrā arrived at Kurujāṅgala, and having visited Yudhishṭhira in the Kāmyaka wood. As Maitreya advised Duryodhana to make peace with the Pāṇḍavas now that Bhīma had slain Kirmīra, etc., Duryodhana gave him a slight by slapping his thigh and scratching the ground with his foot. Therefore Maitreya cursed him, saying that Bhīma should smash that thigh of his with his mace; this curse, however, should not take effect if he made peace with the Pāṇḍavas. Dhṛtarāshṭra wished to hear about the death of Kirmīra, but Maitreya would not speak again to him, because his words were not regarded by Duryodhana; saying that Vidura would relate it to him, he went away. Duryodhana went out perturbed. [Māndhātrupākhyāna(ṃ)] (episode relating to Māndhātṛ.) (cf. Māndhātuḥ . . . upākhyānaṃ, I, 446).—§ 407 (Tīrthay.): Questioned by Yudhishṭhira, Lomaça said: King (rājarshi, v. 10429) Yuvanāçva Saudyumni, of Ikshvāku's race, performed besides other sacrifices 1,000 horse-sacrifices. As he had no sons, he made over the duties of the state to his ministers, and retired to the woods. Having once observed a fast, he entered the hermitage of Bhṛgu, while the great ṛshis were asleep, and drank a jar of water, which the son of Bhṛgu (maharshiḥ), after having performed severe austerities, had destined to be drunk by Yuvanāçva's queen in order that she should bear him a son, who by his bravery might send even Indra to the abode of Yama. A sacrifice was then performed for him; after 100 years a son pierced Yuvanāçva's left side (nor did Yuvanāçva die). Indra came, and put the boy's forefinger into his mouth, saying "me he shall suck" (mām ayaṃ dhāsyati, whence the boy was called Māndhātṛ). Thereby Māndhātṛ became very strong, and grew 13 cubits (kishkūn), and acquired the whole of the Vedas including the Dhanurveda by his thought alone, and on the same day he obtained the bow Ājagava and a number of shafts made of horn, and an impenetrable coat of mail. He was placed on the throne by Indra himself, and conquered the three worlds in a righteous way; the gems of their own accord came into his possession, and he performed a number of sacrifices with abundant gratuities, and sat at Indra's side. His sacrificial grounds (caityaiḥ) were to be found all over the earth, and he is said to have given away to the Brahmans 10,000 padmas of kine. After twelve years' drought he caused rain to come down, paying no heed to Indra. He slew the Gāndhāra king of the lunar dynasty. Here, in the midst of Kurukshetra, is the spot where he sacrificed to the gods (III, 126).

Then the gods, headed by Brahman and the ṛshis, asked Mahādeva (i.e. Çiva) to prevent him from dancing. The god then in the presence of M. pressed his thumb with the tip of his own finger, and from the wound there came ashes, white as snow. Then M. became ashamed and adored Rudra, saying that he was the refuge of the world, including the gods and the Asuras, that he had created the three worlds, and swallows everything at the end of the yuga, that he cannot be fathomed by the gods themselves, that all the gods headed by Brahmán are to be seen in him, etc. At his request Çiva said to the Brahmarshi that his asceticism (tapas) should through the grace of Çiva increase a thousandfold, that he would dwell with him in the āçrama, and that those who bathe in Saptasārasvata and worship Çiva should be able to obtain everything here and hereafter, and go to the Sārasvata loka; then Mahādeva disappeared: III, 83, 6086.—§ 615 (Baladevatīrthayātrā): IX, 37, 2185 (siddhaḥ . . . mahāmuniḥ, had performed austerities at Saptasārasvata); 38, 2186.— § 615*f* (do.): M. had from his youth led the life of a brahmacārin. Once, when performing his ablutions in the river Sarasvatī, he beheld a woman bathing in the river; at this sight his seed dropped and fell into the Sarasvatī; he took it up and placed it in his earthen pot; then it became divided into seven parts, whence were born seven ṛshis: Vāyuvega, etc. (β), who were the progenitors of the Maruts. [Manushyagrahakathana(ṃ)] ("on the demons that possess mankind"). § 502 (cf. Skandop.). The six divorced wives of the ṛshis, together with Vinatā, obtained permission from Skanda to become his mothers. At the request of Indra the Kṛttikās (i.e. the six wives of the ṛshis) (together with Vinatā, see v. 14464 and Nīl.) are placed among the nakshatras (and presided over by Agni) instead of Abhijit, the younger sister of Rohiṇī, who from jealousy had repaired to the woods. Brahmán ordered that time should be reckoned from Dhanishṭhā, while it had formerly been reckoned from Rohiṇī (so Nīl.). Then (these seven) mothers asked Skanda that they might become the mothers of the worlds instead of the old mothers (Brāhmī, Māheçvarī, etc.; Nīl.) and devour the progeny of those old mothers, because they had slandered them before their husbands, and always dwell with Skanda. Skanda granted that until the age of 16 years they should have the power of afflicting the human kind, and he loosed from his body his Raudra nature, under the name of Skandāpasmāra, that they might dwell with him. Enumeration of several grahas (the number 18 in v. 14490 is difficult to explain), among others (a) the male and female children of Skanda (the males are the husbands of the females); they are all named Skandagrahas; they are propitiated with offerings, ablutions, unguents, etc., and particularly by the worship of Skanda; and when they are propitiated they bestow good on men. Then are mentioned the grahas, that afflict men from the 16th to the 70th year; after the 70th year fever takes the place of the grahas. These evil spirits always avoid those who have subdued their senses, etc., and those who are devoted to Maheçvara (III, 230).

Mārjāra - mūshika - saṃvāda(ḥ) ("the discourse between a cat and a mouse"). § 646*b* (Āpaddh.): There was a large banyan in the midst of a forest, with various kinds of birds, etc. A wise mouse, Palita, lived at the foot of that tree, having made a hole there with 100 outlets. On the branches lived a cat Lomaça. A Cāṇḍāla came and built a hut, setting his traps of leather strings every evening after sunset. One day he caught the cat. Palita began to eat the flesh in the trap, but beheld the mongoose Harita and the owl Candraka. He resolved upon saving the cat, though an enemy, in order to escape from them; having made peace with the cat, he crouched beneath it; the mongoose and owl left the spot; the mouse began to cut the strings slowly, notwithstanding the cat's impatience. At morning the Cāṇḍāla Parigha appeared (description), accompanied by a pack of dogs. Then the mouse quickly cut the remaining string; the cat got upon the banyan, Palita entered his hole. The hunter took up his net and left the spot. Palita would not conclude friendship with the cat, and entered another hole.

[Mārkaṇḍeyasamāsyāparvan(°va)] ("section relating to the [Pāṇḍavas'] enjoying the company of Mārkaṇḍeya," the 41st of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). (Cf. Mārkaṇḍeyasamāsyā.) § 451: When the Pāṇḍavas were dwelling at that very place (cf. v. 12547: caratāṃ marudhanvasu, "roaming about in deserts"), there set in the season of the rains (description). Then in the autumn (description) they spent the holiest night, that of the full moon in the month of Kārttika, on the Sarasvatī with the ascetics. As soon as the dark fortnight set in, they with their charioteers and cooks entered the Kāmyaka forest (III, 182).—§ 452: In the Kāmyaka wood many brahmans came to them, and one of them said that Kṛshṇa and Mārkaṇḍeya would come to see them. Immediately Kṛshṇa arrived with Satyabhāmā on his chariot that was yoked with Çaibya and Sugrīva. He told Kṛshṇā that her sons, though her father and brothers proffered them a kingdom and territories, found no joy in the house of Drupada, but that in the town of the Vṛshṇis they were directed by Subhadrā and received instruction from Raukmiṇeya even as Aniruddha, Abhimanyu, Sunītha, and Bhānu, and were instructed by the young Abhimanyu in the use of arms. Then he suggested to Yudhishṭhira with the Daçārhas, Kukuras, and Andhakas, to kill Duryodhana, etc. Yudhishṭhira said they would stand by their promise, and after the thirteen years take refuge in Kṛshṇa.—§ 453: While they were thus talking, the brahmarshi Mārkaṇḍeya (b) appeared. When they had taken their seats, the devarshi Nārada also came to visit them. Yudhishṭhira, mentioning the happiness of the impious Dhārtarāshṭras, asked Mārkaṇḍeya about the results of men's acts. Mārkaṇḍeya, after having described the Kṛta age and the subsequent deterioration, answered the question (III, 183).—§§ 454–5: Brāhmaṇamāhātmya - kathana (q.v.).—§ 456: Sarasvatī-Tārkshya-saṃvāda (q.v.).—§ 457: Vaivasvatopākhyāna (q.v.).—§ 458: Yudhishṭhira, saying that Mārkaṇḍeya alone worships Brahmán at the time of the great dissolution, when he sleeps in a lotus flower, and when he awakes to recreate the world, asked him to explain the causes of things. Mārkaṇḍeya said: Janārdana attired in yellow robes is the great creator of everything. After the dissolution, creation again comes to life. Kṛta yuga = 4,000 years + dawn 400 years + eve 400 years; Tretā yuga = 3,000 + 300 + 300; Dvāpara yuga = 2,000 + 200 + 200; Kali yuga = 1,000 + 100 + 100; altogether a cycle of yugas = 12,000 years. After the Kali yuga is over, the Kṛta yuga comes again. One thousand cycles constitute a day of Brahmán. Description of Kali yuga (b). Then comes a long drought, and seven suns drink up all water and reduce wood and grass to ashes. Then the Samvartaka fire with wind penetrates into Rasātala and terrifies the gods, Dānavas, and Yakshas, and consumes this world with gods, Asuras, Gandharvas, Yakshas, Uragas, and Rākshasas. And there rise in the sky deep masses of clouds flooding the entire surface of the earth and showering incessantly for twelve years. Then Svayambhū, dwelling in the lotus, drinks this terrible wind and goes to sleep.—§ 459: When all has become water, I (i.e. Mārkaṇḍeya) alone wander in affliction and become fatigued, and find no resting-place. Then I behold a vast banyan-tree, and on a couch attached to a bough of that tree a fair boy with yellow robes, with the mark of Çrīvatsa. He caused me to enter his body through the mouth, and then I beheld the whole earth with cities and kingdoms, Gaṅgā, Çatadru, etc. (enumeration) (a), gods, Sādhyas, Rudras, Ādityas, etc. (enumeration) (β). At last I was suddenly projected through his open mouth by a gust of wind. Within that very moment I acquired a new sight and beheld myself emancipated (nirmuktaṃ). I wished to know his self. Then he spoke to me (III, 188): "The gods even do not know me truly. I am Nārāyaṇa (v. 12952: "in ancient times I called the waters nārā, and because the waters have ever been my ayana [home], therefore I have been called Nārāyaṇa"), the eternal and unchangeable source of all things, the Creator and Destroyer of all; I am Vishṇu, Brahmán, Çakra, etc.; in the form of Çesha I support this earth, in the form of a boar I raised it when sunk in water; I am the Vaḍavāvaktra fire; from my mouth, arms, thighs, and feet sprang brahmans, kshatriyas, vaiçyas, and çūdras; from me spring the Ṛg.-, Sāma-, Yajur-, and Atharva-veda; I am the Samvartaka fire, the Samvartaka wind, the Samvartaka sun, and the Samvartaka fire (!) (v. 12966 foll.); the stars are the pores of my skin, etc. When virtue and morality decrease, I create myself into new forms; in the Kṛta age I become white, etc. (see §§ 426*b*, 427, 428, 429). When the end comes, I alone in the form of Kāla destroy the three worlds, etc. The grandsire of all creatures (Sarvalokapitāmaha) is half of my body. I am the bearer of the conch-shell, the discus, and the mace. For a period of 1,000 cycles of yugas I sleep, overwhelming all creatures in insensibility, and I stay here, in the form of a boy though I am old, until Brahmán wakes up; under the form of Brahmán I have repeatedly granted thee boons. When Brahmán (Sarvalokapitāmaha) awakes, I will then alone create all creatures." Then he disappeared, and I (Mārkaṇḍeya) beheld this creation start into life. And that deity is Kṛshṇa, thy relative. In consequence of the boon granted by him memory does not fail me, my life is long, and death is under my control (v. 13002). Then all bowed down unto Janārdana (i.e. Kṛshṇa), who comforted them (III, 189).—§ 460: Yudhishṭhira asked him about the future cause of the government (sāmrājya) of the earth. Mārkaṇḍeya, having given a short description of the other yugas, described in detail the Kali-yuga (b); "in the new Kṛta-yuga, Kalkin (c) will arise." Then Mārkaṇḍeya gave Yudhishṭhira some moral precepts and exhortations (III, 190–1).—§ 461: Vāmadevacarita (q.v.).—§ 462: Bāka-Çakra-saṃvāda (q.v.). § 463: Çibi (q.v.).—§ 464: Nāhusha-carita (v. Yayāti).—§ 465, on the same topic: There were two learned and able kings, Vṛshadarbha and Seduka. Seduka knew that Vṛshadarbha had from his boyhood an unuttered vow, that he would give no other metal to brahmans than gold and silver. He once sent a brahman, who asked him for 1,000 horses for his preceptor, to Vṛshadarbha, who whipped him and then gave him a day's tribute (which was more than the value of 1,000 horses), "because he had whipped him" (III, 196).—§ 466: Çibi (q.v.).—§ 467: Rājanyamahābhāgya (q.v.).—§ 468: Indradyumnopākhyāna (q.v.).—§ 469: Asked by Yudhishṭhira in what condition (age) a man should practise charity, Mārkaṇḍeya enumerated four kinds of futile life and sixteen kinds of futile charity. The brahmans save others and themselves by japa, mantra, and homa. He next enumerated the brahmans that should be excluded from çrāddhas, and gave other moral precepts (of offerings to the gods of flowers and sandals and pastes, entertainment of guests); then he enumerated the persons to whom one should make gifts; the effects of various gifts to brahmans (food is the best).—§ 470: Yamaloka (q.v.).—§ 471: Precepts about gifts, washing the feet of brahmans, etc. Blessing upon the reader.—§ 472: Three kinds of purity (speech, deed, water); by adoring sandhyā and reciting Gāyatrī one is protected against sin and evil results from gifts, against inauspicious stars, and against Rākshasas. Greatness of the brahmans. The carrying of three staves, etc., are useless if the heart be not pure. They who do not commit sin in manas, word, deed, and buddhi do really practise austerities (v. 13468: by tapas one may attain Svarga, by charity enjoyment, by knowledge salvation (moksha), by bathing in tīrthas purgation from sins).—§ 473: On the effects of various gifts at various times (v. 13480: the first offspring of fire is gold, earth springs from Vishṇu, and the cows from the sun; he, therefore, that gives away gold, land, and kine, has given the three worlds [of Agni, Vishṇu, and the Sun]) (III, 200).—§ 474: Having heard the history of Indradyumna, Yudhishṭhira, saying that Mārkaṇḍeya knew the gods, Dānavas, Rākshasas, the royal genealogies and the genealogies of the ṛshis, and Gandharvas, Yakshas, Kinnaras, and Apsarases, asked him about Kuvalāçva Ikshvāku. Mārkaṇḍeya related: Dhundhumāropākhyāna (q.v.).—§§ 479–87: Pativratopākhyāna (q.v.).—§§ 488–94: Āngirasa (q.v.).—§§ 495–8: Skandotpatti (q.v.).—§ 499: Skanda-Çakra-samāgama (q.v.).—§§ 500–1: Skandopākhyāna (q.v.).—§ 502: Manushyagrahakathana (q.v.).—§§ 503–7: Skandayuddha (q.v.).—§§ 508–9: Kārttikeyastava (q.v.).

Mātalīya, adj. ("relating to Mātali"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 331 (°am upākhyānaṃ, i.e. Mātalīyopākhyāna).

[Mātalīyopākhyāna(ṃ)] ("the episode relating to Mātali"). (Cf. Mātalīyam upākhyānaṃ.) § 564 (Bhagavady.). The holy Ṛshi (bhagavān ṛshiḥ) Kaṇva said to Duryodhana in the assembly of the Kurus: Brahmán, the grandsire of the universe (Lokapitāmahaḥ), is indestructible and eternal. The holy Ṛshis (bhagavantāv ṛshī) Nara and Nārāyaṇa are of the same character. Of all the sons of Aditi, Vishṇu alone is eternal . . . In this connection is cited an old story: Mātali, the charioteer of Indra, had, by his wife Sudharmā, one beautiful daughter, Guṇakeçī. As he found no suitable husband for her amongst D., Dai., G., or men and Ṛ., Mātali set out for the Nāgaloka (V, 97). On the way Nārada, proceeding to visit Varuṇa, followed Mātali, and first showed him the abode of Varuṇa, surrounded by his sons and grandsons. Varuṇa's son Pushkara had been chosen as husband by Soma's daughter Jyotsnākālī (who had [before] chosen (so PCR.) the eldest and foremost of Aditi's sons (i.e. Sūrya, Nīl.)). He then showed him the abode, entirely made of gold, of the liquor (Vāruṇyaṃ): to the possession of that liquor (surā) the gods owe their being Surāḥ. He showed him also the weapons that had belonged to the Daityas and had been obtained by the gods as a booty of war; when hurled at the foe they always return into the hand that hurls them. Here dwelt in days of yore many tribes of Rā. and Dai. Here is that fire of blazing flames and the discus of Vishṇu; and that knotty bow that was created for the destruction of the world; it is always protected with great vigilance by the gods, and it is from this bow that the one wielded by Arjuna has taken its name; it is endued with the strength of 100,000 bows; it punishes all wicked (rakshobandhushu) kings; it was first created by Brahmán and praised by Çukra (B. Cakreṇa); it is held by the sons of the Lord of waters. He showed him also Varuṇa's umbrella in the umbrella-house, always dropping water that cannot be seen. Innumerable are the wonders to be seen here (V, 98). In the very centre of the Nāgaloka is the city Pātāla with Daityas and Dānavas, the Asura fire, fed by water; here the gods, having first vanquished their foes, quaffed the amṛta and deposited the residue; the Āditya Hayaçiras; from here Airāvata takes up water in order to impart it to the clouds, and it is that water which Indra pours down as rain; aquatic animals, the timi, etc., which subsist on the rays of the moon; here Mahādeva practised ascetic austerities for the benefit of all creatures; maharshis addicted to the vow of go (govratinaḥ); here in the race of the celebrated elephant Supratīka were born the elephants Airāvaṇa (the king of his tribe), Vāmana, Kumuda, and Añjana; an egg in the waters from the commencement of the creation, whence, when the end of the world comes, a fire bursts forth and consumes the three worlds, etc. Mātali said: "No one here seems to be eligible" (V, 99). In Pātāla is Hiraṇyapura, built by the Dānava (so PCR.; B. and C. Viçvakarmaṇā) Maya, belonging to the Daityas and Dānavas, who in days of yore lived here having obtained boons, exhibiting 1,000 different kinds of illusion, incapable of being vanquished by Çakra, Yama, Varuṇa, or Kubera, etc. The Kālakhañjas (Asuras, who sprang from Vishṇu (?), so PCR.: Asurāḥ Kālakhañjāç ca tathā Vishṇupadodbhavāḥ; C. Kālaka°) and the Yātudhānas (Rākshasas, who sprang from the feet of Brahmán (?), so PCR.: Nairṛtā Yātudhānāç ca Brahmapadodbhavāç ca ye) (description); the Nivātakavacas (Dānavas); "many times, O Mātali! thou with thy son Gomukha and Indra hadst to retreat before them"; description of their abodes (the gems arkasphaṭika, vajrasāra, padmarāga, etc.). Mātali would not choose a son-in-law among the Dānavas, the enemies of the gods; "as regards thyself (i.e. Nārada), I know that thy heart is ever set on fomenting quarrels (hiṃsātmakaṃ)" (V, 100). Then the world of the Suparṇas, who subsist on snakes and have sprung from the six sons of Garuḍa: Sumukha, etc. (α), of Kaçyapa's and Vinatā's race, adorned with the Çrīvatsa, belonging to the kshatriya order, for they never attain to brahmanhood (brāhmanyaṃ) in consequence of their preying upon their kinsmen; they are shown favour by Vishṇu, and adore Vishṇu. The names of the principal are: Suvarṇacūḍa, etc. (β) (V, 101). Rasātala is the seventh stratum below the earth; here dwells Surabhī, the mother of kine, born of the amṛta; her milk springs from the essence of the six different kinds of tastes; she sprang of old from the mouth of Brahmán, who was gratified with drinking the amṛta and vomited the best of things (i.e. the cow and the brahman, PCR.). A jet of her milk created the Milky Ocean (kshīranidhi), covered with white foam that is the food of the ascetics (munisattamāḥ) Phenapāḥ ("Foam-drinkers"); the very gods fear them because of their austerities. From Surabhī are born the four kine that support the quarters (diçāṃ pālyaḥ): in the East Surūpā, in the South Haṃsikā, in the West Subhadrā, in the North (dharmyām Ailavilasañjñitāṃ) Sarvakāmadughā. The gods and the Asuras, making Mandara their pole, churned the Ocean, and obtained Vāruṇī, Lakshmī, amṛta, Uccaiḥçravas, and Kaustubha. Surabhī milks sudhā to those who live on sudhā (i.e. the Nāgas, PCR.), svadhā to those who live on svadhā (i.e. the Pitṛs, PCR.), and amṛta to those who live on amṛta (i.e. the gods, PCR.). The gāthā that was sung by the dwellers of Rasātala in days of old is still heard to be recited in the world by persons of learning: "Neither in the Nāga-loka, nor in Svarga, nor in a vimāna, nor in heaven (Tripishṭape) is residence so happy as in Rasātala" (V, 102). The city of Bhogavatī resembles Indra's city Amarāvatī; it is ruled over by Vāsuki, the king of the Nāgas; here dwells Çesha (b); here dwell the innumerable Nāgas (description), the sons of Surasā, wearing svastika, etc. The principal are Vāsuki, etc. (γ). Mātali wished to get for his son-in-law the Nāga Sumukha of Airāvata's race, the son of Cikura (who had been not long before slain by Garuḍa), and the grandson of Āryaka Kauravya and the daughter's son of Vāmana (V, 103). Nārada introduced Mātali to Āryaka as the friend and charioteer of Indra, who drives his chariot drawn by 1,000 steeds, and thereby has vanquished the enemies of the gods. Āryaka objected that Garuḍa, who had slain Cikura, when he left these regions had said that after a month he would devour Sumukha also. According to a proposal of Mātali, they all visited Indra and Vishṇu; Vishṇu proposed to give amṛta to Sumukha; but Indra disagreed on account of the prowess of Garuḍa; instead he gave him an excellent lease of life, and having married Mātali's daughter he returned home (V, 104). Garuḍa made remonstrances to Indra, saying that he, like him, can without any fatigue bear the weight of the three worlds; that he had slain the Daityas Çrutaçrī, etc. (δ); that he not only perches on Vishṇu's flagstaff, but sometimes carries him with all his friends on his back, and he can carry Vishṇu without fatigue on only one of his feathers. Vishṇu shows him that he cannot bear the weight of his one right arm; then he threw Sumukha with the toe of his foot upon Garuḍa's breast. And from that time Garuḍa has ever lived (in friendship?) with that snake. Kaṇva continued: "In the same way, O Duryodhana! thou canst note ncounter Bhīma, etc. (ε)." Duryodhana, fixing his eyes on Karṇa, burst into laughter, saying: "I am precisely what the creator has made me" (V, 105).

Matsa (IV, 145), v. Matsya[2].

Matsya[1], a king, son of Vasu Uparicara. § 76 (cf. Ādivaṃçāvatāraṇa): When Girikā's season came, the pitṛs of Vasu (q.v.) asked him to slay deer; when he in the forest was longing for Girikā, he gave his semen, enveloped by an açoka leaf, to a hawk in order that it should be carried to Girikā; persecuted by another hawk, the hawk let the semen fall into the Yamunā, where it was swallowed by the Apsaras Adrikā, who had by the curse of a brahman been transformed into a fish. In the tenth month the fish was caught, and out of its womb came a boy, who was given to Uparicara and afterwards became the king Matsya, and a girl, Satyavatī, who was of a fishy smell, and was retained by the fisherman. When killed, Adrikā assumed her own celestial shape and went away to the regions of the Siddhas, the Ṛshis, and the Cāraṇas: I, 63, 2393 (rājā).—§ 267 (Yamasabhāv.): II, 8, 320 (in the palace of Yama). [Mausalaparvan] ("the section relating to the battle with clubs," the 16th of the great and the 98th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Mausala). § 793: Vaiçampāyana said: When the 36th year [after the great battle] was reached, Yudhishṭhira beheld many unusual portents (specification). A little while afterwards he heard of the wholesale carnage of the Vṛshṇis in a battle with clubs, where only Kṛshṇa and Rāma had escaped with life; he summoned his brothers and took counsel with them; they were filled with grief; the death of Kṛshṇa they could not believe. Janamejaya inquired about the particulars of the destruction of the Vṛshṇis and Andhakas. Vaiçampāyana said:  When the 36th year . . . (cf. above). Asked by Janamejaya, cursed by whom the Vṛshṇis, etc. (a), met with destruction, Vaiçampāyana said: Sāraṇa, etc., saw Viçvāmitra, Kaṇva, and Nārada arrived at Dvārakā; they disguised Çāmba as a woman, calling her the wife of Babhru, and asked the ascetics what [sort of child] this one would bring forth. The ascetics answered: "This Çāmba will bring forth a terrible iron club for the destruction of the Vṛshṇis and Andhakas, except Rāma (who will enter the ocean) and Kṛshṇa (whom Jarā will pierce while lying on the ground)." Then they went to Kṛshṇa. Informed of what had taken place, Kṛshṇa summoned all the Vṛshṇis and told them of it, but did not try to annul the curse. The next day Çāmba actually brought forth an iron club. The fact was reported to the king [Ugrasena], who caused it to be reduced into powder and thrown into the sea. At the command of Āhuka, etc. (β), the manufacture of spirits was forbidden among all the Vṛshṇis and Andhakas, under the penance of being impaled alive with all one's kinsmen. All the citizens (knowing that it was the command of Rāma also) bound themselves by the rule (XVI, 1). [The embodied form of] Time every day wandered about their houses, like a man of terrible and fierce aspect, bald head, black and tawny of complexion; they shot innumerable arrows at him, without being able to pierce him. Also other dreadful portents of calamity were daily seen by the Vṛshṇis throughout the city (description). They showed disregard for brahmans, P., and D., etc., except Rāma and Kṛshṇa, etc. When the Pāñcajanya was blown in their houses, asses brayed aloud from every direction. Kṛshṇa, seeing that the day of the new moon coincided with the 13th [and 14th] lunation, summoned the Yādavas and said: The 14th lunation has been made the 15th by Rāhu once more, as at the time of the great battle of the Bharatas (v. the note of PCR. on p. 5). He understood that the 36th year had come according to the curse of Gāndhārī, and that the omens were similar to those which Yudhishṭhira had noticed when the two armies were arrayed in order of battle. He endeavoured to bring about those occurrences which would make Gāndhārī's words true. He commanded the Vṛshṇis to make a pilgrimage to some sacred water, and caused the messengers to proclaim a journey to the sea-coast (XVI, 2). At that time the Vṛshṇi ladies dreamt every night that a black woman with white teeth, entering their abodes, laughed aloud and ran through Dvārakā stealing [from them]; the men dreamt of vultures that devoured the Vṛshṇis and Andhakas in the houses and fire-chambers; their ornaments, etc., were taken away by Rā. The iron discus of Kṛshṇa, given by Agni, with a nave of adamant, ascended to heaven. Kṛshṇa's chariot was dragged away by his four steeds over the ocean; Kṛshṇa's and Baladeva's standards (resp. Garuḍa and a palmyra), which were reverently worshipped by those two heroes, were taken away by Aps., who day and night called upon the Vṛshṇis and Andhakas to set out on a pilgrimage to some sacred water. They prepared various kinds of edibles and spirits, and set out to Prabhāsa. Uddhava took leave of them and Kṛshṇa before departing [from the world]. The Vṛshṇis, mixing with spirits the food that had been cooked for the brahmans, gave it to apes, and began revels with drinking, so also Rāma, etc. (γ); Yuyudhāna blamed Kṛtavarman for the nightly slaughter, and was applauded by Pradyumna, but was rebuked by Kṛtavarman with having killed Bhūriçravas while sitting in prāya; Kṛshṇa cast an angry glance [at Kṛtavarman], and Sātyaki informed him of the story of the gem Syamantaka, which was Satrājit's; Satyabhāmā, weeping, approached Kṛshṇa, and sitting on his lap enhanced his anger; Sātyaki swore that he would cause Kṛtavarman to follow the five sons of Draupadī, etc (δ), whom he had slain with the help of Açvatthāman, and he severed his head in the very sight of Kṛshṇa, and began to strike down others; Kṛshṇa rushed forward to prevent him from doing further mischief, and the Bhojas and Andhakas all assailed him; Kṛshṇa did not interfere; they struck Yuyudhāna with the pots from which they had been eating; Pradyumna rushed forward to rescue Yuyudhāna; they were both slain. Kṛshṇa in wrath took up a handful of erakā grass, which became a terrible iron club, with which Kṛshṇa slew all that came before him. The Andhakas, etc. (ϵ), also took up blades of the erakā grass, which were converted into iron clubs, and struck one another in consequence of the curse of the brahmans; son killed father and vice versa, inebriated with spirits. Beholding that Çāmba, etc. (ζ), were slain, Kṛshṇa exterminated the Vṛshṇis and the Andhakas. Babhru and Dāruka told him now to go to Rāma (XVI, 3). Dāruka, Kṛshṇa, and Babhru, seeking Rāma, saw him sitting thoughtfully, reclining his back against a tree. Kṛshṇa sent Dāruka to inform Arjuna and tell him to come quickly, and he also dispatched Babhru to protect the ladies against robbers; but as soon as Babhru had proceeded to a distance, an iron club attached to the mallet of a hunter came and slew him. Kṛshṇa then, entering Dvāravatī, told his father to protect the ladies till Arjuna came, saying that he would practise penances with Rāma. When he came to Rāma, the latter had applied himself to yoga, and from his mouth issued a huge white Nāga with 1,000 heads and red eyes, who proceeded to the ocean, and was received by the ocean and many celestial snakes (and many sacred rivers): Karkoṭaka, etc. (η). After Rāma's death Kṛshṇa wandered for some time, and then sat down, thinking of Gāndhārī (§ 619) and Durvāsas (§ 773*c*), and the destruction of the Vṛshṇis, Andhakas, and Kurus, whence he concluded that the hour [of his death] had come; he then restrained his senses [in yoga]; though he was the Supreme Deity, he wished to die in order to dispel all doubts, etc., and to make the words of Durvāsas true. The hunter Jarā, mistaking Kṛshṇa for a deer, pierced him at the heel with an arrow; coming up, he beheld a man dressed in yellow robes, rapt in yoga, with many arms; he became filled with fear; Kṛshṇa comforted him and then ascended upwards, and was received in heaven by Indra, etc. (θ) (XVI, 4). Meanwhile Dāruka came and informed the Pāṇḍavas of the slaughter of the Vṛshṇis, etc. (ι). Arjuna with Dāruka proceeded to Dvārakā; when Kṛshṇa's 16,000 wives saw Arjuna, they uttered a loud cry; the city seemed to Arjuna to be the fierce river Vaitaraṇī; Arjuna, Satyā (the daughter of Satrājit), and Rukmiṇī fell down and wailed; then praising Kṛshṇa and comforting the ladies, Arjuna went to Vasudeva (XVI, 5), whom he found lying on the ground and burning with grief; Vasudeva lamented (κ) and said he would die by abstaining from food (XVI, 6). Arjuna said that the hour had come for the Pāṇḍavas also for departing [from the world] (λ); he would, however, first remove to Indraprastha the women, the children, and the aged of the Vṛshṇis. Saying to Dāruka that he wished to see the chief officers of the Vṛshṇis, Arjuna entered the hall of the Yādavas called Sudharmā, where he said to the citizens and ministers that he would take away with him the remnants of the Vṛshṇis and Andhakas, as the sea would soon engulf the city; Vajra would be their king at Indraprastha; they would set out on the seventh day at sunrise. Arjuna passed that night in the mansion of Kṛshṇa. At dawn Vasudeva by yoga attained to the highest goal; the ladies were in despair. His four wives, Devakī, Bhadrā, Rohiṇī, and Madirā, ascended the funeral pyre, and attained to the regions of Vasudeva. When Arjuna had caused Vasudeva and his four wives to be burnt (under immense tokens of sympathy from the women), the boys (headed by Vajra) and the ladies offered oblations of water to Vasudeva. Then Arjuna visited the spot where the Vṛshṇis had been killed and caused the last rites to be performed, and caused Rāma and Kṛshṇa to be cremated. On the seventh day he set out, mounting his chariot, with the ladies and children, the Yādava troops, and other inhabitants, with Kṛshṇa's 16,000 wives and Vajra; they numbered many millions in all. Then the ocean flooded Dvārakā. They proceeded in slow marches. When they had planted their encampment at Pañcanada, the Ābhīras (Mlecchas) conspired to rob the cavalcade. Arjuna succeeded only with great difficulty in stringing his bow; his celestial weapons would not come to his mind; the Vṛshṇi warriors failed to rescue the women, who were snatched away by the robbers; Arjuna's shafts soon became exhausted; formerly they had been inexhaustible. Arjuna became very cheerless; he escorted the remnant of the cavalcade to Kurukshetra; he established the son of Kṛtavarman in the city of Mārttikāvata with the remnant of the women of the Bhoja king; the remainder, with children and old men and women, at Indraprastha, with Vajra as their ruler; the son of Yuyudhāna (with old men, etc.) on the banks of the Sarasvatī; the widows of Akrūra, notwithstanding the entreaties of Vajra, entered the woods; Rukmiṇī, etc. (μ), ascended the funeral pyre; Satyabhāmā and the other wives of Kṛshṇa entered the woods in order to practise penances in the contemplation of Hari; going beyond Himavat, they took up their abode in Kalāpa-grāma. Then Arjuna entered the retreat of Vyāsa (XVI, 7). Asked by Vyāsa ("Hast thou been sprinkled with water from anybody's nails or hair, etc.?"), Arjuna informed him of what had passed (ν) ("500,000 warriors have thus been laid down"). Vyāsa said that the Vṛshṇis and Andhakas had been consumed by the brahman's curse; it was destiny: "Kṛshṇa, as also the Pāṇḍavas, have finished their work; the time has come for your departure from the world," etc. (ξ). Arjuna entered Hāstinapura and informed Yudhishṭhira of what had taken place (XVI, 8).

[Mokshadharmaparvan] ("the section containing the rule for attaining to emancipation from transmigration," the 90th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Mokshadharma). § 659: Yudhishṭhira inquired about the duties in the four stages of life; Bhīshma indicated the attainment of emancipation as the highest of all duties. Yudhishṭhira asked Bhīshma how grief might be overcome; Bhīshma related the old story of the conversation between a brahman and king Senajit, burning with sorrow on account of the death of his son; dissociation from the world is the grand method of overcoming grief. The brahman cited the verses sung by Piṅgalā (a fallen woman who was denied the company of her lover through an accident) about the manner in which she had acquired eternal merit; freedom from hope and desire is felicity. King Senajit experienced delight and became very happy (XII, 174). Yudhishṭhira inquired of Bhīshma as to what constitutes the highest good that man should seek in view of the transient character of time; Bhīshma related the old narrative of a discourse between a brahman, who was devoted to the study of the Vedas, and his son Medhāvin, who was well conversant with the religion of emancipation, and acquainted also with the affairs of the world, on the uncertainty of life and the mutability of all things save Brahman (XII, 175). Yudhishṭhira asked how happiness and misery come to the rich and the poor; Bhīshma related the old narrative of what was sung by Çampāka, who had achieved emancipation, told in former times by a poor brahman rendered miserable by a bad wife, etc.; the faults of prosperity; in renunciation is the highest good of men (XII, 176). Yudhishṭhira asked what a man must do to find happiness if he be poor. Bhīshma explained who is a happy man, and related the old narrative of what Maṅki had sung when freed from attachments; Maṅki found that he was assiduously doomed to disappointments; at last, with a remnant of his property, he purchased a couple of young bulls with a yoke; a camel ran away with them upon its neck; Maṅki's observations, quoting Çuka: desire is fraught with sorrow (XII, 177). In this connection reference is made to the old verses sung by the Videha king Janaka, who had attained to tranquillity of soul: "even if the whole of Mithilā be consumed in a conflagration I shall incur no loss." Discourse between king Nāhusha (i.e. Yayāti) and Ṛ. Bodhya about freedom from attachment; Bodhya's six preceptors (Piṅgalā, etc.) (XII, 178). Yudhishṭhira wished to know by what conduct a person may succeed in this world and attain to an excellent end. Bhīshma related the old story of the discourse between king Prahlāda and a sage who had adopted the Ājagara vow: the indifference of the latter to all worldly objects in view of the inevitability of death (XII, 179). Yudhishṭhira asked which of these, viz. kinsmen, or acts, or wealth, or wisdom, should be the refuge of man. Bhīshma answered that wisdom should be the refuge, instancing Bali, etc. (α), and related the old story of the discourse between Indra and Kāçyapa, a Ṛ.'s son, who was brought to the ground by a vaiçya negligently driving his chariot, and who in despair resolved to end his life; Indra appeared to him in the form of a jackal and proved to him the superiority of his status as a human being and a brahman; not to yield to the instigation of the senses constitutes happiness; "thou dost not regret (smarasi) wine (Vāruṇī) nor the latvāka fowls; there is no drink and no food more delicious than these; . . . the vilest Pukkasa or Cāṇḍāla never wishes to give up his life." Kāçyapa gave up the desire of ending his life; he knew the jackal to be Indra, worshipped him, and returned home (XII, 180). Yudhishṭhira asked whether gifts, sacrifices, penances, and dutiful services to preceptors are productive of merit. Bhīshma's discourse on righteousness and sin and their respective consequences on life (XII, 181).—§ 660: Yudhishṭhira inquired about him who has created the universe and to whom it returns when dissolution comes. Bhīshma related the old narrative of the sacred words that M.-ṛ. Bhṛgu uttered in reply to the questions of Bharadvāja, on the Kailāsa summit, explaining to him the cosmogony, i.e. Bhṛgu-Bharadvāja-saṃvāda (b) (XII, 182–192).—§ 661: Yudhishṭhira asked Bhīshma about the ordinances about conduct. Bhīshma's discourse on the characteristics of the wicked and the good ("Sūrya should always be worshipped," etc.), and the duties that all men should practise, quoting D.-ṛ. Nārada; "one who has abstained from meat should not take meat even if it be sanctified with mantras from the Yajurveda" (XII, 193). Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Bhīshma discoursed on adhyātma; the nature of the three attributes of Goodness, Passion, and Darkness; the distinction between matter (sattva) and soul (kshetrajña); the highest end to be obtained is emancipation (XII, 194). Bhīshma discoursed on the four kinds of yoga; "M.-ṛ., obtaining a knowledge of the same, attain to eternal success (siddhiṃ) even here" (XII, 195). Yudhishṭhira inquired after the fruits of the silent recitation of sacred mantras; Bhīshma wanted to recite the old narrative of the discourse between Yama, a brahman, and Time (v. infra, ch. 199); on Sāṅkhya, "otherwise called the Vedānta," and Yoga, Bráhman, etc. (XII, 196). Yudhishṭhira inquired about the other aims of silent reciters; Bhīshma indicated the different aims realized by different kinds of reciters (XII, 197); the nature of the hell into which reciters may sink; the regions of Lp., etc. (a), are hells compared to the region of the Supreme Soul, i.e. to emancipation (XII, 198).—§ 662: Yudhishṭhira wished to hear in full the dispute between Time, Mṛtyu, Yama, Sūrya's son Ikshvāku, and a brahman, referred to above (v. ch. 196); Bhīshma related this old story, i.e. Jāpakopākhyāna (b) (XII, 199–200).—§ 663: Yudhishṭhira inquired about the results of the yoga of knowledge, of all the Vedas, and of observances and vows; Bhīshma related the old discourse between Manu Prajāpati and his disciple M.-ṛ. Bṛhaspati (the foremost of D.-ṛ.), in days of old, who had studied the Ṛcs, etc. (a); Bṛhaspati asked how an embodied being departs from one body and attains to another; acts result from the desire of obtaining happiness and avoiding misery; the efforts for the acquisition of knowledge arise from the desire of avoiding both happiness and misery; it is by avoiding acts that one succeeds in entering into Bráhman; the nature of Bráhman (XII, 201); continuation of Manu's discourse on the nature of emancipation and the soul; the soul takes its character from the body; how the soul leaving one body enters into another (XII, 202); though invisible, the soul exists (XII, 203); continuation of Manu's discourse, explaining how the soul may be seen (XII, 204); continuation of Manu's discourse, explaining how grief may be avoided; how Bráhman may be attained (XII, 205); abstention from acts is the highest religion (XII, 206).—§ 664: Yudhishṭhira asked Bhīshma about the nature of the Supreme Deity (Vishṇu, Nārāyaṇa, etc. (a)). Bhīshma's discourse, which he had heard from Rāma Jāmadagnya, etc. (β), on the nature of Nārāyaṇa or Govinda, etc. (γ); the Asura Madhu (δ); Brahmán's seven will-born sons (δ), etc. (ε). Madhusūdana (Kṛshṇa) created day and night, etc. (ζ); then from his mouth he created 100 brahmans, from his arms 100 kshatriyas, from his thighs 100 vaiçyas, and from his feet 100 çūdras, and then he made Dhātṛ (i.e. Brahmán, PCR.) the lord and ruler of all created beings; Brahmán also became the expositor of the knowledge of the Vedas; Virūpāksha he made the ruler of the spirits and ghosts and Mātṛs; Yama the ruler of P. [and] all sinful men; Kubera the lord of all treasures; Varuṇa the lord of the waters and of all aquatic animals; Indra the lord of the gods. In those times men lived as long as they chose, without any fear of Yama; offspring was begotten by a fiat of the will. In the Tretā age children were begotten by touch alone. In the Dvāpara age sexual intercourse originated. In the Kali age men have come to marry and live in pairs. The sinful creatures of the earth, born in the southern region and called Andhrakas, etc. (η); in the northern region, the Yaunas, etc. (θ); their practices are similar to those of Cāṇḍālas and ravens and vultures; in the Kṛta age they were nowhere on earth; it is from the Tretā that they have had their origin; when the terrible interval [between the Tretā and the Dvāpara] came, the kshatriyas engaged in battle. D.-ṛ. Nārada, that observer of all the worlds, has said that Kṛshṇa is the supreme god (XII, 207).—§ 665: Yudhishṭhira asked who are the first Prajāpatis, and who the great Ṛshis, and in which direction they dwell. Bhīshma enumerated Brahmán's seven sons (a), mentioned in the Purāṇas as seven Brahmáns. The Prajāpatis that came after these are: (a) in Atri's race: Prācīnabarhis (Brahmayoniḥ sanātanaḥ) > the ten Prācetasaḥ > Prajāpati Daksha or Ka; (b) Marīci had one son Kaçyapa or Arishṭanemi. Atri had another son born of his loins, the handsome and princely Soma; he performed penances for 1,000 celestial yugas. Aryaman and his sons were rulers and creators of all creatures. Çaçabindu had 10,000 wives, and begot upon each of them 1,000 sons, who would call none Prajāpati save themselves; the ancient (purāṇāḥ) brahmans call creatures (prajāṃ) Çāçabindavī; this race became the progenitor of the Vṛshṇi race. "These that I have named are the illustrious Prajāpatis." The deities are: the twelve Ādityas (all sprung from Kaçyapa) (β); the Açvins (γ) (the sons of Mārtaṇḍa—ashṭamasya); these were first called the gods and the two classes of Pitṛs (?te ca pūrvaṃ surāç ceti dvividhāḥ pitaraḥ smṛtāḥ). Tvashṭṛ's son was the handsome Viçvarūpa; Ajaikapād, etc. (δ) [are the eleven Rudras]; these were reckoned as gods at the time of the Prajāpati Manu; the Siddhas and Sādhyas, different as to perfect conduct and youth; the Ṛbhus and the Maruts were also classes of gods (C. devānāṃ cādito gaṇāḥ; B. codito gaṇaḥ); thus are enumerated the Viçvedevās and the Açvins. Amongst them the Ādityas are kshatriyas, the Maruts vaiçyas, the Açvins (engaged in penances) çūdras; the gods [called] Aṅgirasaḥ are brahmans. The person who at morn recites the names of these deities becomes cleansed of all his sins. Yavakrīta, etc. (ε), and Kaṇva, etc. (ζ), all reside in the east; Unmuca, etc. (η), in the south; Ushaṅgu, etc. (θ), in the west; Ātreya, etc. (ι), in the north. These are the witnesses [of the universe] and the creators of all the worlds. By reciting these names one is cleansed of all one's sins; by sojourning to these points a person becomes cleansed of all his sins and succeeds in returning home in safety (XII, 208).—§ 666: Yudhishṭhira inquired about the reason of Kṛshṇa's assuming the form of an animal. Bhīshma said that formerly, while hunting, he arrived at the hermitage of Mārkaṇḍeya, where he was honoured by Ṛ., and M.-ṛ. Kaçyapa related: In former days Dā. and As. Naraka, etc., oppressed D. and D.-ṛ.; the earth seemed to be oppressed with a heavy weight. The Ādityas repaired to Brahmán, who said that Vishṇu in the form of a boar would slay the As. Some time afterwards Vishṇu (having yoga for his soul, etc.) penetrated into the earth (into Rasātala) in the form of a boar, and uttering tremendous roars (nādena), at which even D. with Indra became terror-stricken, pierced the As. with his hoofs, etc., whence he came to be called Sanātana. Brahmán explained to the gods that he was Kṛshṇa, the Creator of all things, the foremost of yogins, etc., he from whose navel the primeval lotus had sprung, etc. (XII, 209).—§ 667: Yudhishṭhira inquired about the nature of that high yoga by which emancipation may be attained. Bhīshma related the old narrative of a discourse between a preceptor (the foremost of Ṛ.) and his disciple on emancipation; on adhyātma (undisclosed in the very Vedas); Vāsudeva is the supreme [cause] of the universe; he is the origin of the Vedas (viçvasya brahmaṇo mukham), etc.; he created P., D., Ṛ., Y., Rā., N., As., and men, etc.; having reduced everything into non-existence, he once more, in the beginning of a yuga, creates Prakṛti; at the end of every yuga the Vedas and all other scriptures disappear; in consequence of the grace of Svayambhū, M.-ṛ., through their penances, first re-acquire the Vedas and Itihāsas; Svayambhū knows the Vedas, Bṛhaspati their Aṅgas, Bhārgava (i.e. Çukra) the Nītiçāstra (science of morality, etc.), Nārada the Gāndharva (the science of music), Bharadvāja the science of arms (Dhanurgraham), Gārgya the history of the celestial Ṛshis (devarshicaritaṃ), Kṛshṇātreya medicine, diverse other teachers the philosophical systems (Nyāyatantrāṇi, cf. Nīl.). Neither D. nor Ṛ. were [originally] able to apprehend Bráhman; only Nārāyaṇa knew it; from him Ṛ., the foremost D., As., and R.-ṛ. of old learnt it. Etymology of Purusha (navadvāraṃ puraṃ vyāpya çete, v. 7679) (XII, 210). Continuation of Bhīshma's discourse explaining how the inclinations and instincts of a past life run towards the soul in a new life (XII, 211). Continuation of Bhīshma's discourse on abstention from acts and the nature of knowledge. Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Bhīshma discoursed on the faults that should be got rid of in order to attain to emancipation (XII, 212). Continuation of Bhīshma's discourse (XII, 213). Bhīshma's discourse on the means of conquering the senses (XII, 214). Bhīshma's discourse on the consequences of attachment to the objects of the senses (XII, 215). Bhīshma's discourse on the nature and causes of dreams. Darkness has been adopted by the Asuras; Bráhman is difficult of attainment by either the gods or the Asuras; goodness, passion, and darkness belong to the deities and the Asuras; goodness is the attribute of the deities, while the two others belong to the Asuras; Bráhman transcends all those attributes; it is pure knowledge, and is obtainable only by withdrawing the mind and the senses from all external objects (XII, 216). Who may be said to know Bráhman; the distinction between pravṛtti and nivṛtti; the respective nature of prakṛti and purusha; the nature and consequences of yoga (XII, 217). —§ 668: Yudhishṭhira inquired about the conduct by which Janaka the king of Mithilā attained to emancipation. Bhīshma recited the old narrative of the conversation between Pañcaçikha and Janaka of Mithilā, i.e. Pañcaçikha-vākya (b) (XII, 218–219).—§ 669: Yudhishṭhira asked what leads to happiness and what to misery and what to freedom from fear; Bhīshma's discourse on self-restraint (XII, 220). Yudhishṭhira's question about the merits of subsisting upon the remnants of sacrifices, and whether fasting be really a penance (tapas); Bhīshma explained that though fasting is generally regarded as a penance, it is not so in reality, being rather an impediment to the acquisition of the knowledge of soul; living upon sacrificial remnants is regarded as fasting of the highest merit (XII, 221).—§ 670: Yudhishṭhira asked whether man should be regarded as the real doer of acts. Bhīshma related the old narrative of a discourse between the Daitya king Prahlāda, who was unattached to worldly objects, etc., and Indra, who questioned Prahlāda about the best means by which knowledge of the soul can be attained, etc., and was instructed by him. Indra became filled with wonder, and, having worshipped the Daitya king, proceeded to his own abode (XII, 222).—§ 671: Yudhishṭhira inquired about the kind of intelligence by adopting which a king deprived of kingdom and prosperity may still live on earth. Bhīshma related the old narrative of the discourse between Indra and Virocana's son Bali, i.e. Bali-Vāsava-saṃvāda (b) (XII, 223–225).—§ 672: Bhīshma related the old narrative of the discourse between Indra and the Asura Namuci, i.e. Çakra-Namuci-saṃvāda (b) (XII, 226).—§ 673: Yudhishṭhira asked as to what is good for a man sunk into dire distress. Bhīshma discoursed on fortitude, quoting the old narrative of the discourse between Bali and Vāsava (Indra), i.e. Bali-Vāsava-saṃvāda (b) (XII, 227).—§ 674: Yudhishṭhira inquired about the indications of future greatness and future fall. Bhīshma related the old story of the discourse between Çrī and Çakra, i.e. Çrī-Vāsava-saṃvāda (b) (XII, 229).—§ 675: Yudhishṭhira inquired about the practices that lead to the attainment of Bráhman. Bhīshma said that one engaged in the religion of nivṛtti, etc., can attain to Bráhman, quoting the old narrative of the discourse between the wise Jaigīshavya and Asita Devala, who was instructed by Jaigīshavya to behave indifferently towards praise and blame, etc., "D., G., Pç., and Rā. cannot reach the rank which is his who has attained to the highest end" (XII, 230).—§ 676: Requested by Yudhishṭhira about the man that is dear to all, Bhīshma quoted the words that Kṛshṇa, asked by Ugrasena, said to him on a former occasion on the subject of D.-ṛ. Nārada's qualifications (XII, 231).—§ 677: Yudhishṭhira inquired about the origin and the end of all creatures, the nature of their thoughts and acts, of the divisions of time, and of the allotted periods of life in the respective epochs or yugas; having heard the discourse of Bhṛgu to B.-ṛ. Bharadvāja, he had become attached to yoga. Bhīshma recited the old narrative of what the divine Vyāsa said to his son Çuka (who had studied the Vedas with all their branches, and the Upanishads, and was desirous of leading the life of brahmacarya) about these very questions. Vyāsa said: Only Bráhman is without beginning and without end. Ṛ. have measured time thus: 15 winks of the eye = 1 kāshṭhā; 30 kāshṭhās = 1 kalā; 30$\frac{1}{10}$ kalās = 1 muhūrta; 30 muhūrtas = 1 day and night; 30 days and nights = 1 month (= 1 day and night of the Pitṛs, the lighted fortnight being their day and the dark fortnight their night); 12 months = 2 ayanas = 1 year = 1 day and night of the gods (udagayana, i.e. from winter solstice to summer solstice = the day; dakshiṇāyana, i.e. from the latter to the former = the night). Moreover, there are the day and night of Brahmán and his years also. Of the Kṛta-yuga the duration is 4,000 [celestial] years, with a morning (sandhyā) of 400 years and an evening (sandhyāṃça) of 400; the other yugas gradually decrease by a quarter. In the Kṛta age all duties exist in their entirety, and all live for 400 years (free from disease, etc.); in the other yugas duty, etc., decrease by a quarter. The duties for the several yugas are different. In Kṛta penance is foremost, in Tretā knowledge, in Dvāpara sacrifice, in Kali gift. These 12,000 [celestial!] years constitute a yuga; 1,000 yugas = 1 day of Brahmán (when the universe starts into life) = 1 night of Brahmán (= universal dissolution, the Creator being asleep, having taken recourse to yoga, meditation). Brahmán, waking up, modifies the indestructible Bráhman, etc. (XII, 232). Vyāsa explained the creation, etc. (XII, 233). Vyāsa told how the Supreme Lord merges everything into his soul (XII, 234). Vyāsa discoursed on the duties of a brahman; "they that are good deserve to have even Uccaiḥçravas"; Satyasandha, having offered his life to save a brahman, ascended to heaven; likewise Saṅkṛti's son Rantideva, having given tepid water to Vasishṭha; Ātreya Indradamana, having given wealth to a deserving person; Çibi Auçīnara, having given his limbs and son for the sake of a brahman; the Kāçi king Pratardana, having given his eyes to a brahman; king Devāvṛdha, having given a costly umbrella (with all the people of his kingdom); Sāṅkṛti Ātreya, having given instructions to his disciples on Bráhman; Ambarīsha, having given eleven arbudas of kine to the brahmans (with all the people of his kingdom); Sāvitrī [i.e. Sāvitra = Karṇa, cf. XIII, 6253], by giving away the ear-rings; Janamejaya, by giving away his own body; Yuvanāçva Vṛshādarbhi, by giving gems, a mansion, and beautiful women; the Videha king Nimi gave away his kingdom, Jāmadagnya (Paraçu-Rāma) the whole earth, Gaya the earth with her towns (to the brahmans); Vasishṭha, when the clouds ceased to pour rain, kept alive all creatures; Karandhama's son Maruta, by giving away his daughter to Aṅgiras, ascended to heaven; king Brahmadatta Pāñcālya, by giving the jewel Çaṅkha (to brahmans); king Mitrasaha, by giving his dear wife Madayantī to Vasishṭha (with that wife of his); R.-r. Sahasrajit, having given his life for the sake of a brahman; king Çatadyumna, having given to Mudgala a house made of gold, etc.; the Çālva king Dyutimat, having given unto Ṛcīka his kingdom; R.-ṛ. Lomapāda, having given his daughter Çāntā to Ṛshyaçṛṅga (obtained all his wishes); R.-ṛ. Madirāçva, by giving his daughter to Hiraṇyahasta; king Prasenajit, by giving 100,000 cows with calves; etc. (XII, 235). Continuation of Vyāsa's discourse on the duties of a brahman: the knowledge that should be acquired (a); knowledge is necessary for emancipation (XII, 236). The different stages of a yogin's progress (XII, 237). Asked by Çuka, Vyāsa discoursed on the character of that knowledge which leads to emancipation (XII, 238). Vyāsa's discourse on whether acts are obligatory or optional; "the men of the Tretā, Dvāpara, and Kali yugas are inspired with doubts; the men of the Kṛta yuga are devoted to penances, etc. In the beginning of the Tretā, the Vedas and sacrifices and the divisions of caste and the several modes of life exist in their entirety; in consequence, however, of the duration of life having decreased in Dvāpara, all these things likewise decline; in the Dvāpara age, and even in the Kali, the Vedas are overtaken with perplexity; towards the close of the Kali again it is doubtful if they ever become even visible to the eye" (XII, 239). Asked by Çuka, Vyāsa discoursed on the import of those duties that lead to emancipation; "in the feet [of living creatures] is Vishṇu; in their arms Indra; within the stomach Agni; in the ears are the quarters; in the tongue is speech which is Sarasvatī"; success cannot be attained to without knowledge, penances, subjugation of the senses, and renunciation; the doctrine of knowledge as expounded in the Sāṅkhya system (XII, 240). The doctrine of Yoga (XII, 241). Asked by Çuka, Vyāsa reconciled the declarations of the Veda about acts and abstention from acts (XII, 242). Çuka inquired about how emancipation may be acquired without violating the ordinance about the obligatory character of acts; Vyāsa's discourse on the duties of brahmacārins (XII, 243). Vyāsa's discourse on the duties of the householder (XII, 244). The duties of the forest stage of life. "The fourth stage [of life] is based upon the Upanishads; the duties laid down for it [i.e. renunciation] may be observed in all the stages of life equally; this stage differing from the others comes after domestic and forest life; in this very yuga many learned brahmans have been known to observe this stage; Agastya, etc. (β), were the authors of this course of duties, and themselves observing them have all proceeded to heaven; and so also Sudivātaṇḍi (yathāvāso 'kṛtaçramaḥ, i.e. who had no fixed residence), and the numerous Yāyāvaras, etc. (γ); freed from fear and not being counted among the stars and planets (anakshatrāḥ), [these] are to be seen in the firmament [as] hosts of luminous bodies (jyotishāṃ gaṇāḥ)" (XII, 245). Çuka inquired how one leading the forest mode of life should act wishing to achieve emancipation; Vyāsa's answer about the necessity, after having passed through the first and the second stages, of having recourse to yoga in order to attain to emancipation; the duties to be observed by such a man (XII, 246). Vyāsa's observations on the soul (jīva) and the Supreme Soul (XII, 247). Çuka asked what is adhyātma and whence it comes; Vyāsa's explanation of adhyātma; Çuka asked how one may succeed in understanding the unequal distribution of the five elements in different objects, and which among those elements represents which sense, etc.; Vyāsa's observations on the nature of mind, understanding, and the soul (XII, 248). Continuation (XII, 249). Do. (XII, 250). Çuka inquired about what constitutes the highest duty; Vyāsa's discourse on duties (XII, 251). Continuation (XII, 252). The relation of the senses and their objects to the five primal elements (XII, 253). Persons conversant with the scriptures succeed in beholding the soul, etc.; . . . the practice of yoga has been recommended by Çāṇḍilya (XII, 254). The tree of desire, its seed and roots and branches and leaves and fruit (XII, 255). Bhīshma recapitulated the substance of Vyāsa's discourse on the respective attributes of the elements (XII, 256).—§ 678: Yudhishṭhira lamented the carnage caused on the field of Kurukshetra. Bhīshma recited the story of Anukampaka (b) with Mṛtyu-Prajāpati-saṃvāda (c) (XII, 257-259).—§ 679: Yudhishṭhira asked what is righteousness and whether righteousness is for this world or for the next or for both. Bhīshma's answer: the practices of the good, the Smṛtis, and the Vedas, etc., according to Ṛ. of old (XII, 260). Continuation (XII, 261).—§ 680: Inquired of by Yudhishṭhira about righteousness (XII, 262) Bhīshma related the old narrative of the conversation of Tulādhāra with Jājali on the topic of righteousness, i.e. Tulādhāra-Jājali-saṃvāda (b) (XII, 263-265).—§ 681: Bhīshma related an old narrative of what was recited by king Vicakhyu (B. °khn°) through compassion for all creatures, in condemnation of animal slaughter when he saw the mangled body of a bull and heard the painful groans of the kine in a cow sacrifice, and observed the cruel brahmans gathered there to assist at the ceremonies. "Manu has applauded harmlessness in all acts. . . . The true brahmans realize the presence of Vishṇu in every sacrifice." Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Bhīshma said that one should acquire merit and act in such a way that one's body may not languish and suffer pain, and that death may not come (XII, 266).—§ 682: Yudhishṭhira asked whether one should act speedily or with delay. Bhīshma told the old story of what occurred with respect to the wise Cirakārin, the son of Medhātithi Gautama of the race of Aṅgiras (Āṅgirase kule), who came to be called thus because he used to reflect long upon all matters, etc., and was regarded as an idle and foolish person. Once M.-ṛ. Gautama (the foremost of practisers of yoga), witnessing an act of grave misconduct in his wife Ahalyā, in wrath commanded Cirakārin to slay her, and then departed for the woods. Cirakārin began to think for a long while (description), remembering that the father is the performer of garbhādhāna and sīmantonnayana, etc., and that the mother is the son's dhātrī, etc. (etymology of several names of the mother and of the father), etc.; he thought that his mother was not to blame, as Indra had come to her in the form of her husband, etc. When many days had expired Gautama returned, shedding tears of repentance and thinking that the fault committed was due to his own carelessness (etymology of two names of the wife), and now became filled with great joy, and from that time, dwelling in his hermitage, did not live separately from his spouse or his son. He said: "Blessed be thou, O Cirakārika! do thou always reflect long before acting," uttering some verses upon the merits of reflecting long. Gautama at last ascended to heaven with his son (XII, 267).—§ 683: Yudhishṭhira asked how a king should protect his subjects without injuring anybody. Bhīshma related the old narrative of the conversation between Dyumatsena and his son king Satyavat, and the words spoken by the latter in behalf of some individuals who had been brought out for execution at the command of his father ("the killing of individuals can never be a righteous act"), quoting the instructions he had received from their grandsires of olden days, as to how kings should rule their subjects in the different ages (a); "when the Kali age sets in . . . fifteen parts of even that one-fourth of righteousness disappear, one-sixteenth thereof being all that then remains of it," and quoting Manu Svāyambhuva (XII, 268).—§ 684: Yudhishṭhira inquired about the relative superiority of domestic life and yoga. Bhīshma recited the old narrative of the discourse between the Yati Kapila and Syūmaraçmi on animal sacrifices, the obligatory character of acts, and the merits of yoga and renunciation. In days of old when Tvashṭṛ came to king Nahusha, the latter was on the point of killing a cow in order to show him hospitality; Kapila said, "Alas! ye Vedas"; Ṛ. Syūmaraçmi, entering the cow, blamed this saying of Kapila, etc. (XII, 269); the three classes of Pitṛs (a), etc. (XII, 270). Continuation (XII, 271).—§ 685: Yudhishṭhira asked which among the three, viz. religion, profit, and pleasure, is superior. Bhīshma recited the ancient narrative of the benefit that the cloud Kuṇḍadhāra (not yet adored by other men) in days of old had conferred upon a poor brahman that was devoted to him, and who had failed to obtain wealth by worshipping the gods. The brahman worshipped the cloud with dhūpas, etc.; the cloud became pleased and said to the brahman that the wise have ordained expiation for brahmanicide, drinking spirits, stealing, etc., but not for one that is ungrateful; "Expectation has a child named Iniquity, Wrath is a child of Envy, Cupidity of Deceit, Ingratitude is barren." After that the brahman, on a bed of kuça-grass and penetrated with the energy of Kuṇḍadhāra, beheld all living beings in a dream, and Maṇibhadra in the midst of the gods employed in giving his orders; the gods were engaged in bestowing kingdoms, etc., upon men, etc.; Kuṇḍadhāra prostrated himself before the gods in the presence of all Y. and prayed for some favour in behalf of the brahman; Maṇibhadra first offered to give him wealth, but was prevailed upon by Kuṇḍadhāra to give virtue alone. The brahman became disgusted with the world and entered the woods and practised severe penances (description), and his mind was firmly set upon virtue; his strength did not diminish, and after a long time he acquired spiritual vision, etc. Kuṇḍadhāra then paid him a visit and caused him to see the end that is attained by kings; he beheld thousands of kings sunk in hell, and many living in this world embracing lust and wrath, etc. Kuṇḍadhāra said: "With these [vices] all human beings are enchained; the gods are afraid of men; these vices, at the command of the gods, mar and disconcert on every side; no man can become virtuous unless permitted by the gods. . . ." The brahman confessed that he had not appreciated Kuṇḍadhāra's favour as he ought to do; Kuṇḍadhāra forgave him and disappeared. The brahman roamed through all the worlds, having attained to ascetic success (siddhiṃ) through the grace of Kuṇḍadhāra. D., brahmans, Y., good men, and Cā. always adore only the virtuous (XII, 272).—§ 686: Yudhishṭhira asked what that sacrifice is which is ordained for the sake of virtue alone and not for the acquisition of heaven or wealth. Bhīshma related the history, formerly recited by Nārada, of a brahman named Satya, who in order to perform sacrifices lived according to the uñcha vow (description); his wife Pushkaradhāriṇī did not approve of his conduct (i.e. his cruel sacrifices), but at his command she (clad in plumes of peacocks) joined a sacrifice where he was the hotṛ. His neighbour the virtuous Parṇāda at the command of Çukra (or, according to a various reading, of Çukra's race, so B., the text of C. is in disorder) addressed him in the shape of a deer, telling him to slay him and sacrifice with him, and Sāvitrī also told him to do so, but in vain; Sāvitrī then entered the sacrificial fire; but the deer (who was Dharma), causing the brahman through spiritual vision to behold Aps. and G., at first made him desire to slay the deer (at which his tapas diminished greatly), but then won him over to the ahiṃsā religion, and himself assisted him in his sacrifice; "the injury of living creatures forms no part of sacrifice (leading only to heaven)" (XII, 273).—§ 687: Yudhishṭhira inquired about how one becomes sinful, or virtuous, by what one attains to renunciation, and by what one wins emancipation, whereafter he was instructed by Bhīshma (XII, 274). Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Bhīshma expounded the means for attaining to emancipation (XII, 275).—§ 688: Continuation of Bhīshma's discourse, quoting the old narrative of the discourse between Nārada and Asita Devala, whom Nārada questioned about the origin and destruction of all creatures (XII, 276).—§ 689: Yudhishṭhira inquired after the means for removing desire. Bhīshma related the old narrative of what was said by the Videha king to the inquiring Māṇḍavya: "Even if the whole of Mithilā burn in a conflagration, nothing of mine will be burnt down." The brahman Māṇḍavya became filled with joy and betook himself to the path of emancipation (XII, 277).—§ 690: Yudhishṭhira inquired about the good which one should pursue in view of the transient character of time. Bhīshma related the old narrative of a discourse between a father, who was devoted only to the study of the Vedas, and his son Medhāvin, who was conversant with the religion of emancipation. The father acted in the way pointed out [by his son] (XII, 278).—§ 691: Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Bhīshma explained of what behaviour a man should be, of what acts, of what kind of knowledge, etc., in order to be able to attain to Bráhman (XII, 279).—§ 692: Yudhishṭhira asked when he should succeed in abandoning sovereignty for adopting renunciation. Bhīshma's answer stating the certainty of Yudhishṭhira's acquisition of emancipation, and quoting that discourse which was sung in days of old, viz. the conversation between Dai. (As.) Vṛtra, after he became divested of all his prosperity, and [his preceptor] Uçanas; Vṛtra said: "Desirous of fighting Indra, I beheld in that battle Hari = Nārāyaṇa, etc. (a)" (XII, 280); while Uçanas instructed him about Vishṇu whose head is the infinite place [i.e. emancipation], Sanatkumāra came there and, asked by Uçanas, instructed Vṛtra; "Vishṇu is Brahmán, etc." (β); the six colours; the four higher regions (γ); the indestructible and infinite some say is the region of Mahādeva, etc. (δ). Vṛtra became free from sorrow, gave up his life-breaths, and attained to the highest station. Yudhishṭhira asked whether Kṛshṇa is identical with the Supreme Deity; Bhīshma answered in the affirmative. Yudhishṭhira's applause of Vṛtra. Bhīshma said that the Pāṇḍavas would in the end be numbered among the Siddhas (XII, 281).—§ 693: Yudhishṭhira asked how Vṛtra, whose virtue and devotion to Vishṇu and comprehension of the Upanishads and the Vedánta were so great, was vanquished by Indra, and how the battle took place. Bhīshma described the battle, i.e. Vṛtra-vadha (b) (XII, 282-283).—§ 694: Yudhishṭhira inquired about the origin of fever. Bhīshma narrated the Jvarotpatti (b) (XII, 284).—§ 695: Janamejaya (!) inquired how the horse-sacrifice of Prajāpati Daksha Prācetasa was destroyed during the age of Manu Vaivasvata by Çiva in consequence of Umā's rage and grief, and how Daksha was enabled to reunite the divided limbs of that sacrifice. Vaiçampāyana (!) narrated the Dakshayajña-vināça (b).—§ 696: Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Bhīshma told the 1,008 names by which Daksha adored Çiva, i.e. Daksha-prokta-Çiva-sahasra-nāma-stotra (b) (XII, 285).—§ 697: Yudhishṭhira again inquired about adhyātma, and had it explained by Bhīshma (XII, 286).—§ 698: Yudhishṭhira inquired how sorrow and death may be avoided. Bhīshma related the old narrative of the discourse between Nārada and Samaṅga (XII, 287).—§ 699: Yudhishṭhira asked what is beneficial for one who is not conversant with the scriptures, etc. Bhīshma related the old narrative of the discourse between Gālava and D.-ṛ. Nārada (devoted to yoga) about the āçramas, etc. (XII, 288).—§ 700: Yudhishṭhira inquired how a king should behave in view of the great object of acquisition, and what attributes he should have for freeing himself from attachments. Bhīshma recited the old narrative that was uttered by Tārkshya Arishṭanemi to Sagara, who asked his counsel. Sagara acquired those virtues which are productive of emancipation and continued, with their aid, to rule his subjects (XII, 289).—§ 701: Yudhishṭhira asked why D.-ṛ. Uçanas Kāvya (Bhārgavadāyāda) sided with the Asuras and not with the gods, and whence he came to be called Çukra; whence he got such superior excellence, and why he does not succeed in travelling to the centre of the firmament. Bhīshma related the Bhava-Bhārgava-samāgama (b) (XII, 290).—§ 702: Yudhishṭhira inquired about the acts by performing which one wins the highest good both here and hereafter. Bhīshma narrated what king Janaka in days of yore had inquired of Parāçara about the duties of life. "The sceptic argues: the deities, G., and Dā. have become what they are in consequence of their own nature" (XII, 291). Continuation (XII, 292). "Rantideva obtained success in all the worlds by worshipping the ascetics with offerings of only roots and fruits and leaves. The royal son of Çibi won the highest regions of bliss by gratifying Sūrya along with his companion with offerings of the same kind. . . . Ṛcīka's son became the son of Viçvāmitra by adoring the gods with Ṛcs. Uçanas became Çukra by gratifying the god of gods, and by hymning Devī he sports in the firmament. M.-ṛ. Asita, etc. (a), by adoring Vishṇu with Ṛcs and by penances attained to success" (XII, 293). Continuation. "Svayambhū first created Dhātṛ; Dhātṛ created a son who was engaged in upholding all the worlds" (v. the note of PCR., p. 539) (XII, 294). Continuation. "The Asuras could not bear that righteousness that prevailed in the world; multiplying they [in the form of Lust and Wrath, PCR.] entered the bodies of men; then was pride generated in men . . .; at that time the gods repaired to Çiva and imparted to him their conjoined energy, and he felled to earth with a single shaft those three Asuras, viz. Desire, Wrath, and Cupidity, who were staying in the firmament, along with their very habitations, and also the chief of those Asuras (i.e. Mahāmoha, PCR.); the men again obtained their proper natures and began once more to study the Vedas, etc. Then the seven Ṛ. came forward and installed Indra as the chief of the gods, and took upon themselves the task of holding the rod of chastisement over mankind. After the seven R. came king Vipṛthu, etc., of the kshatriya order; but there were certain elderly men from whose minds all wicked feelings did not fly away" (XII, 295). Continuation. "Brahmán by penances created all existent objects; Ā., V., etc. (β), have all been crowned with success through their penances" (XII, 296). Asked by Janaka, Parāçara expounded the reason of the difference of colour in men; "originally sprung from Brahmán, all the inhabitants of the earth should have been brahmans." Various kinds of kshatriyas, etc. (γ), have sprung from the four original orders by intermixture. Janaka asked how those born in pure wombs and those in impure ones all became brahmans.

Parāçara said that it was by cleansing their souls by penances, instancing Vasishṭha, etc. (δ). "Originally only four gotras arose: Aṅgiras, Kaçyapa, Vasishṭha, and Bhṛgu; the others have been due to the penances of those that have founded them" (XII, 297). Continuation. "Repairing to the Sarasvatī, etc. (ε) one should make gifts, etc." (XII, 298). Continuation of Parāçara's discourse on duties. Janaka heard everything the Ṛ. said and obtained great happiness from it (XII, 299).—§ 703: Yudhishṭhira asked what opinion should be entertained about the virtues of truth, self-restraint, forgiveness, and wisdom. Bhīshma recited the old narrative of the discourse between the Sādhyas and a Swan (haṃsa), who was Brahmán wandering through the three worlds, and having come upon the Sādhyas instructing them about the religion of emancipation; at last the Sādhyas put a series of detached questions, which were answered by the Swan (XII, 300).—§ 704: Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Bhīshma discoursed on the difference between the Sāṅkhya and the Yoga [systems of philosophy]; what the kinds of diet are by taking which and what the things are by conquering which a yogin acquires yoga power; "the yogin can at his will enter into and emerge from Brahmán, etc. (α) . . .; the yogin has Nārāyaṇa for his soul; prevailing over all things, he is capable of creating all things" (XII, 301). Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Bhīshma discoursed on the principles of the Sāṅkhya [philosophy]; these principles have been established by all the puissant Yatis, Kapila, etc.; with the objects are engaged men, Pç., etc. (β); "Vishṇu is attached to [the organs of] motion, Indra to [those of] strength, Agni to the stomach, etc.; . . . Sattva is attached to the soul; the soul has Nārāyaṇa for its refuge, and he has emancipation for his refuge; emancipation is independent of all refuge; . . . the Prajāpatis, etc. (γ), fall away from their puissance in course of many long ages; . . . the miseries endured by those that fall into the river Vaitaraṇī in the realms of Yama . . . the swallowing up of the moon and the sun by Rāhu, the falling of stars from their fixed positions and the diversions of constellations from their orbits . . . lead the Sāṅkhyas to seek emancipation"; the faults attaching to one's body; "the knowledge of Vedānta is the island of the ocean of life; . . . Sattva carries the Yatis to Nārāyaṇa; Nārāyaṇa carries them to the Supreme Soul (paramātmānaṃ)." Yudhishṭhira inquired whether there is any consciousness in the emancipate state; Bhīshma's answer. Praise of the Sāṅkhya philosophy (XII, 302).—§ 705: Yudhishṭhira inquired about what does deteriorate and what does not. Bhīshma related the old narrative of the discourse between Ṛ. Vasishṭha and king Karāla-Janaka, who asked for his instruction. "At the end of Brahmán's night (differently Nīl. and PCR., cf. note, p. 589), Çambhu of formless soul, etc., awakes, and once more creates that first or eldest of all creatures; the eldest-born being is called Hiraṇyagarbha = Buddhi = Mahat (Yogeshu) = Viriñci = the unborn; in the Sāṅkhya scriptures (Sāṅkhye çāstre) he has many names . . ."; the creations of knowledge and of ignorance; "bodies are possessed by all bodiless creatures, D., etc. (α); . . . transcending the twenty-four topics already adverted to is the twenty-fifth called Vishṇu." "There are three colours in all: white, red, and dark" (XII, 303). Continuation (XII, 304). Do. (XII, 305). Do. "That which the Yogins behold is precisely that to which the Sāṅkhyas strive to attain" (XII, 306). Continuation (XII, 307). Vasishṭha's discourse on what is Vidyā and what is Avidyā. "Yogins have great regard for the Sāṅkhya system, as also for the Vedas; in the Sāṅkhya system no principle transcending the twenty-fifth is admitted; in the Yoga it is said that Bráhman . . . becomes the personal soul (jīva) only when invested with ignorance; in the Yoga scriptures, therefore, both Bráhman and jīva are spoken of" (PCR.) (XII, 308). Vasishṭha's discourse on buddha and abuddha. "I had acquired this knowledge from the eternal Hiraṇyagarbha himself, who communicated it to me for my having carefully gratified that great Being of very superior Soul . . .; it has been imparted to thee exactly as I had it from Brahmán himself." Bhīshma said, "This knowledge was obtained by Vasishṭha from Hiraṇyagarbha, from Vasishṭha it was handed over to Nārada, and from this to me" (XII, 309).—§ 706: Bhīshma recited the conversation between king Vasumat, son of Janaka, and a brahman and Ṛ. of Bhṛgu's race, whom Vasumat saw in the forests when in pursuit of deer, and by whom he was instructed. "R.-ṛ. Mahābhisha, through want of firmness, fell from heaven; Yayāti, though his merits had become exhausted, succeeded in regaining regions of bliss through his firmness." King Vasumat, withdrawing his mind from the pursuit of desire, set it upon the acquisition of righteousness (XII, 310).—§ 707: Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Bhīshma discoursed on that which is freed from duty and its reverse by reciting the old narrative of the discourse between Ṛ. Yājñavalkya and king Daivarāti Janaka, who got instruction from Yājñavalkya. The nine kinds of creation (XII, 311). Yājñavalkya's discourse on the creation of the universe; "10,000 kalpas are said to constitute a single day of the unmanifest one; the duration of his night is equal; when his night expires he awakes, and first creates herbs and plants; he then creates Brahmán or Prajāpati, who springs from a golden egg . . .; 7,500 kalpas measure the day of Brahmán, and his night is of equal duration; Brahmán (mahān ṛshiḥ) then creates Ahaṅkāra (i.e. consciousness; bhūtaṃ divyātmakaṃ), etc." (XII, 312). Yājñavalkya's discourse on the destruction of the universe: "Brahmán, who is eternal and undecaying, and who is without beginning and without end, repeatedly creates and destroys all created objects; when his day expires and night comes he becomes desirous of sleep; at such a time the unmanifest and holy one urges the Being called Mahā-Rudra (ahaṃkṛtaṃ naraṃ, i.e. Ahaṅkārābhimāninaṃ, Nil.), who assumes the form of Sūrya and divides himself into twelve portions, etc.; . . . Consciousness (Ahaṅkāraḥ Prajāpatiḥ) in his turn is swallowed up by the Great Soul (mahān ātmā; v. 11601: the reading of B. is different), who (viçvaṃ) is again swallowed up by Çambhu Prajāpati, [who is] Aṇiman, etc. (α) . . ." (XII, 313). Yājñavalkya's discourse on adhyātma ("the two feet," etc.), adhibhūta ("the act of walking," etc.), and adhidaivata ("Vishṇu," etc.) (XII, 314). Yājñavalkya's discourse on sattva, rajas, and tamas (XII, 315). Yājñavalkya's discourse of what is possessed of attributes and what is not possessed of them (XII, 316). Yājñavalkya's discourse on the Yoga philosophy, "conferring eight kinds of puissance and possessed of eight limbs" (XII, 317). Yājñavalkya's discourse on the diverse ends that people attain to as depending on the manner in which the soul (jīva) escapes from its mortal frame (XII, 318). The story of Yājñavalkya's acquisition of the Yajurveda, as a boon from Sūrya, who had been gratified with his penances; Sūrya had said: "Made up of the essence of speech, the goddess Sarasvatī will enter into thy body"; "he then commanded me to open my mouth; Sarasvatī then entered into my body and I began to burn, and plunged into a stream, angry with Sūrya, who told me that the burning would soon cease, and then the whole Veda with its appendix and the Upanishads would appear in me by inward light, and I should edit the entire Çatapatha, and then turn to the path of emancipation, coveted both by Sāṅkhyas and by Yogins. Sūrya then went to the Asta hills. Sarasvatī appeared before me (description). I taught the Çatapathabrāhmaṇa, etc., to 100 good disciples and thereby did what was disagreeable to my maternal uncle [Vaiçampāyana]. I undertook the management of the sacrifice of thy father; there a dispute arose between me and my maternal uncle as to who should be permitted to appropriate the dakshiṇā for the recitation of the Vedas; in the very presence of Devala I took half of that dakshiṇā; thy father and Sumantu and Paila and Jaimini, etc., all acquiesced in that arrangement. I had thus got from Sūrya the fifteen Yajushes, and likewise Romaharsha learned the Purāṇas (differently PCR.). Aided by Sarasvatī and Sūrya I then set myself to compile the Çatapathabrāhmaṇa. . . . G. Viçvāvasu (Kāçyapa, v. 11777), conversant with the Vedānta, once put me twenty-four questions relating to the Vedas, and then a twenty-fifth (ānvīkshikīṃ) (a); having thought of Sarasvatī I answered them properly, having expounded to him the fourth science that treats of emancipation, and which is based upon the twenty-fifth principle, i.e. jīva." (The answers to the questions.) The personal soul (jīva) and the Supreme Soul should be regarded as one and the same. This Viçvāvasu thought difficult to understand, quoting Jaigīshavya, etc. (β); "M.-ṛ. in Brahmaloka say that Āditya (the sun) himself is thy preceptor." Yājñavalkya instructed him of the relation of the twenty-fifth (jīva) to the twenty-sixth (the Supreme Soul). "Viçvāvasu proceeded towards heaven, and inculcated the science he had obtained from me to the gods in Brahmaloka, etc." Honoured by Daivarāti, Yājñavalkya left his court; the king gave a million of kine, etc., to a number of brahmans; installing his son in the sovereignty of the Videhas, he adopted the practices of the Yatis, and began to study the science of the Sāṅkhyas and Yogins. "They who wait upon Mahat attain to the regions of Mahat; they who wait upon Consciousness attain to the spot that belongs to Consciousness, etc." "I (Bhīshma) got all this knowledge from Janaka, who had obtained it from Yājñavalkya" (XII, 319).—§ 708: Yudhishṭhira asked how one may avoid decrepitude and death. Bhīshma related the old narrative of the Bhikshu M.-ṛ. Pañcaçikha and king Janaka Vaideha, who put him that same question and was instructed by him (XII, 320).—§ 709: Asked by Yudhishṭhira as to how it is possible for a householder to attain to emancipation, Bhīshma recited the Sulabhā-Janakasaṃvāda (b) (XII, 321).—§ 710: Yudhishṭhira inquired how in days of old Çuka Vaiyāsaki was won over to renunciation (nirvedam āpannaḥ). Bhīshma recited the discourse of Vyāsa to Çuka expounding the vanity of worldly attachments. "That sinful wretch who transgresses the ten boundaries that have been fixed by Svayambhū himself is obliged to pass his time in great affliction in the wild wastes in the dominions of the king of the Pitṛs; that man who is tainted with cupidity . . . has to go to deep hells . . . and is forced to bathe in the broad river Vaitaraṇī, whose waters are scalding, etc. (description of hell). . . . Very soon the wind of Yama will blow before thee. . . . By performing the duties of the domestic life men attain to the region of Prajāpati or Bṛhaspati or Indra." Çuka, leaving his father, proceeded to seek a preceptor that could teach him the religion of emancipation (XII, 322).—§ 711: Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Bhīshma discoursed on the efficacy of gifts, sacrifices, penances, services to preceptors, etc. (XII, 323).—§ 712: Çukotpatti (q.v.).—§ 713: Çukakṛti (q.v.).—§ 714: Çukakṛtya (q.v.).—§ 715: Çuka-Nārada-saṃvāda (q.v.).—§ 716: Çukābhipatana (q.v.) Mṛtyu[2]=Sūrya (the sun): III, 146.—Do.[3]=Çiva (1000 names[1]).

Mṛtyu[4] ("Death"), fem. § 594 (Akampana): Nārada said to Akampana: In the beginning the Grandsire Brahmán created all creatures. As the creation bore no sign of decay, he began to think about the destruction of the universe. Failing to find any means of destruction, he became angry, and in consequence of his anger a fire sprang from the apertures of his body (khebhyaḥ) and destroyed all creatures. Then Çiva (the lord of all the wanderers at night) appealed to Brahmán (the greatest of ascetics), who said, "Thou hast been born out of our wish" (kāmāt) (VII, 52), and that the Earth, afflicted with the heavy weight of creatures, had asked him to destroy them. Çiva, saying that he had been appointed by Brahmán the protector of creatures, prevailed upon Brahmán to keep his wrath within his own inner self and extinguish the fire. Then Brahmán expounded the doctrine of pravṛtti and nivṛtti. From his organs of sense (gobhyaḥ, cf. khebhyaḥ in a parallel passage, XII, 9179) then issued a female who was dark, etc., and set out for the southern quarter; Brahmán called her Death (Mṛtyu) and told her to slay the creatures. She wept, but Brahmán caught her tears with his two hands and implored her (VII, 53)—who wished to go to the hermitage of Dhenuka to perform austerities—to slay the creatures. Soon Brahmán smiled, the creatures continued to live as before, and Mṛtyu proceeded to Dhenuka, where she practised austere vows during twenty-one times ten billions of years, and then she wandered 10,000 billions of years with the creatures. Next she repaired to Nandā and there passed 8,000 years, and became purified from all her sins. Then she went to Kauçikī, where she lived upon air and water only. Then she repaired to Pañcagaṅgā and next to Vetasaka (C. Ce°), then to the Gaṅgā and thence to Meru, motionless and suspending her life-breaths. Thence to the top of Himavat (where the gods had performed sacrifices) for a billion of years standing on the toe only of her feet. Then to Pushkara, and Gokarṇa, and Naimisha, and Malaya, with steady devotion to the Grandsire without acknowledging any other god. Brahmán was gratified with her and said that in slaying the creatures she should be without sin; Yama and the diseases should become her helpmates. She prevailed upon him that the passions, covetousness, etc., should tear the bodies of the creatures before she slew them. Her tears which were in his hands should become diseases springing from the creatures themselves and kill men; she should be the virtue of living creatures and the goddess of this virtue. Sin would slay those who were of wicked behaviour; "it will be thy work to sink them in their sins that are wicked." Nārada further expounded the nature of death and told Akampana not to grieve for his dead son: VII, 53, 2068, 2070 (kamalalocanā); 54, (2074), 2082, 2088, 2101, 2105, 2112, †2117, †2118, †2122 (devasṛshṭā), †2123 (daṇḍapāniḥ).—§ 595 (Abhimanyuvadhap.): VII, 55, 2134 (°samutpattiṃ, all. to § 594); 71, 2471 (sambhavo M°oḥ, do.).—§ 678*b* (Mṛtyu-Prajāpatisaṃv.): XII, 258, 9182, 9185;

Mudgala, a ṛshi. § 391 (Ṛshyaçṛṅga): III, 113, 10093 (Nārāyaṇīvendrasenā, i.e. the wife of M., babhūva vaçyā nityaṃ M°sya).—§ 520 (Vṛihidrauṇikap.): III, 260, 15404.— § 520 (cf. Vṛihidrauṇikap.): Vyāsa said: There lived in Kurukshetra a virtuous sage named Mudgala, who lived by picking up ears of corn and grain, collecting a droṇa of corn during one fortnight and eating it together with his son and wife the other fortnight; yet he celebrated the sattra called ishṭīkṛta and the darça- and paurṇamāsa-sacrifices, where Indra himself and the gods partook of the food offered, and entertained his guests with food, for the remainder of the droṇa of corn increased as soon as a guest appeared, so that hundreds of brahmans were fed with it; he lived himself on the food that remained after the gods and the guests had eaten. Having heard of M., Durvāsas, naked and frantic, came to him uttering insulting words, and during six seasons ate up all his food, without perceiving any agitation in M.'s heart. Durvāsas then told M. that in reward he should go to heaven even in his own body. Immediately a celestial messenger (devadūta) appeared upon a chariot yoked with swans and cranes, etc., and invited M. to ascend it. M. first asked the devadūta to tell him about the advantages and disadvantages of heaven (III, 260). The devadūta then described heaven (Svarga) (atheists and untruthful persons and those who have not practised ascetic austerities and those who have not performed great sacrifices cannot repair thither), with its advantages: myriads of beautiful worlds owned by the gods, the Sādhyas, the Viçve, the maharshis, the Yāmas, the Dhāmas, the Gandharvas, and the Apsarases; Meru extending over 33,000 yojanas; the gardens of the celestials; Nandana, etc.; no grief, etc., no sweat, stench, excreta, nor urine, nor dust; the foremost regions are the regions of Brahmán (Brāhmaṇāḥ . . . lokāḥ); thither repair sanctified ṛshis and there dwell the Ṛbhus, the gods of the gods themselves, who suffer no pangs from women, do not possess wealth, etc., do not subsist on oblations nor amṛta, and cannot be perceived by the senses, nor do they change at the revolution of a kalpa; for them there is neither ecstasy, nor joy, nor happiness, nor misery, etc.; they are thirty-three in number, to their regions repair wise men after having observed excellent vows, and also M. had acquired that success by his charity. Its disadvantages: while reaping the fruit of his acts a person cannot be engaged in any others, for this world is one of acts, the other one of fruition; after one has entirely exhausted his merit, he is subject to fall; he is then stupefied and agitated by emotions, and when the garlands of those who are to fall fade away, fear invades their hearts; but by reason of their merits they take birth among men, and then they attain to high fortune and happiness, while, if one cannot acquire knowledge here, he comes by an inferior birth. As M. did not desire to go to heaven, but asked a region where people have not to lament nor to be pained nor agitated, the devadūta described to him the supreme seat of Vishṇu, which is called the highest Bráhman and lies above the abode of Brahmán; thither only those who are free from selfishness, etc., and those who are given to contemplation and yoga, can repair. Then M. bade farewell to the devadūta, and being always engaged in meditation, etc., he at last attained to that supreme state of perfection (jagāma çāçvatāṃ siddhiṃ parāṃ nirvāṇalakshaṇāṃ). "Therefore," Vyāsa continued, "you also, O son of Kuntī, ought not to grieve; after the thirteenth year you will get back your kingdom." Having said this Vyāsa returned to his hermitage to practise austerities (III, 261): III, 260, 15407, 15415, 15418, 15420, 15427, 15434; 261, 15443, 15448, 15469, 15476, (15481).—§ 677 (Mokshadh.): XII, 235, 8606 (Çatadyumna went to heaven after having given a mansion to M.).—§ 721*b* (Viçvāmitrop.): XIII, 4β*, 250 (the same?, son of Viçvāmitra). Nāhusha, Nahushātmaja = Yayāti, q.v.

[Nahushopākhyāna] ("the episode relating to Nahusha"). § 755*b* (Ānuçāsanik.): Nahusha, having acquired the sovereignty of heaven, performed both human and celestial acts, for instance bali and offering of incense and of light, etc.; and although he had become the chief of the gods, he yet worshipped the gods as in days of yore. But then he was filled with pride in consequence of the boon he had received from all the gods, and he ceased to perform religious actions; for a very long time he used to employ the Ṛ. by turns as the bearers of his vehicles; but in consequence of his abstention from religious acts his energy began to diminish; when it was Agastya's turn to carry the vehicle, Bhṛgu came to the hermitage of Agastya (Maitrāvaruṇi), and when the latter, mentioning Brahmán's boon to Nahusha (that whoever would come within the range of his eyesight would, deprived of all energy, be within his sway), and that Brahmán had given him amṛta to drink, despaired of being able to curse him, Bhṛgu said that he had come at the command of Brahmán, and that he would curse Nahusha to be a snake, when he insulted Agastya by a kick, and this very day he would hurl him down and re-establish Indra. Agastya became highly gratified (XIII, 99). Asked by Yudhishṭhira, Bhishma continued [referring to and developing the beginning of XIII, 99: Nahusha's sacrificial rites and presents were obstructed by Rā.]: Nahusha ordered Ṛ. Agastya to carry the vehicle from the banks of Sarasvatī. Bhṛgu, telling Agastya to close his eyes, had entered the matted locks of Agastya, taking care not to cast his eyes upon Nahusha. Nahusha urged Agastya on with his goad and then struck him on the head with his left foot. Then Nahusha was cursed by Bhṛgu and transformed into a snake, but, in consequence of his gifts, etc., he retained his memory, and, assisted by Agastya, pacified Bhṛgu, who said that Yudhishṭhira would rescue him, and then went to the abode of Brahmán and informed him, while Agastya returned to his own hermitage. Brahmán once more installed (caused the gods to instal) Indra in the sovereignty of heaven. "Thou hast, O king, rescued Nahusha from Bhṛgu's curse; he ascended to the abode of Brahmán before thy eyes; in consequence of the merits he had acquired through acts of the kind I have mentioned, he succeeded in once more regaining his lost position. Hence, when evening comes, persons leading the domestic mode of life, should give lamps" (XIII, 100).

bank of the Sarasvatī looked like towns and cities, they took up their abodes on the bank up to Samantapañcaka, the whole region resounded with Vedic recitations, there were present many sorts of ascetics: Vālakhilyas, Açmakuṭṭas, Dantolūkhalins, Prasaṅkhyānas, such as lived on air, such as lived on water, such as lived on leaves, such as lay on the earth instead of in beds, etc. (cf. the note of PCR. p. 150); they made the Sarasvatī beautiful as the gods beautify the Gaṅgā. Not finding sufficient room on the banks of the Sarasvatī they measured out small plots of land with their sacred threads. For their sake the Sarasvatī appeared and made many abodes (kuñjāḥ) in that spot, and then once more flowed in a western direction, therefore this receptacle of water (kuñjaḥ) is named after the ṛshis of Naimisha (Naimishīya iti smṛtaḥ, v. 2175).]—§ 615*i* (Saptasārasvata): IX, 38, 2201, 2204 (the river Sarasvatī appeared in N. as the river Kāñcanākshī).—§ 653 (Āpaddh.): XII, 153, 5676.—§ 702 (Mokshadh.): XII, 298e*, 10937 (°Pushkareshu).—§ 718*b* (Uñchavṛttyup.): XII, 356, 13801 (°e Gomatītīre tatra Nāgāhvayaṃ puraṃ).—§ 733*c* (Pushkara): XIII, 25, 1696.—§ 733*n* (Mataṅgavāpī): XIII, 25, 1719.—§ 757*o* (Goloka): XIII, 102a*, 4887.—§ 758 (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 103β*, 4944.—§ 775 (do.): XIII, 166a*, 7649 (enumeration). Nakuladāyāda = Çatānīka, q.v.

Nakulākhyāna ("the narrative of the mungoose"). § 11 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 609.—§ 786*b* (Anugītāparvan): At the conclusion of Yudhishṭhira's horse-sacrifice, after everybody had been gratified, a blue-eyed mungoose, with one side of its body changed into gold, came and said, in voice as loud and deep as thunder, that this great sacrifice was not equal to a prastha of powdered barley given away by a liberal brahman of Kurukshetra, who was observing the uñcha- (or the pigeon-)vow. Asked by the brahmans the mungoose related: The brahman named lived with his wife, son, and daughter-in-law, and practised penances; he used to eat every day at the sixth division; during a famine he had nothing to eat day after day; one day in the month of Jyaishṭha, while the sun was in the meridian, he was picking up grains of corn, but got nothing; one day, after the sixth division had come, he obtained a prastha of barley, which they reduced to powder for making saktu; having finished their recitations and libations, etc., they divided the powdered barley among themselves, so that each got a kuḍava; then came a guest, who ate all the portions, the wife, son, and daughter-in-law with difficulty prevailing upon the brahman to give their portions as well. The guest turned out to be Dharma; flowers were rained down from heaven; D.-ṛ, D., G., Devadūtas, etc., and B.-ṛ. standing in vimānas and dwelling in Brahmaloka were struck with wonder; "I have been rescued, and others who have not yet come (anāgatāḥ) have been rescued for countless yugas; he that gives away 100 having 1,000, 10 having 100, and a handful of water having no wealth, are equal in merit," citing Rantideva (c), Nṛga (d), and Çibi Auçīnara; "thou hast conquered Brahmaloka." The brahman, with his wife, son, and daughter-in-law, proceeded to heaven on a celestial chariot. The mungoose continued: "I came out of my hole, and by the contact with the powder of barley, etc., my head and half of my body became gold; in order to convert the rest of my body into gold I repeatedly repair to the hermitages of ascetics and to the sacrifices of kings; I came hither with high hopes, but I have not been made into gold." Then the mungoose disappeared (XIV, 90).—That mungoose was Dharma, who having injured Jamadagni (f) had been cursed by the Pitṛs, but became freed from the curse by disparaging himself in the form of Yudhishṭhira (XIV, 92).

Nalopākhyāna ("the episode relating to Nala"), i.e. Nalopākhyānaparvan.—§ 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 321.—§ 11 (do.): I, 2, 436.

[Nalopākhyānaparvan(°va)] ("the episode relating to Nala," the 35th of the minor parvans of the Mahābhārata; cf. Nalopākhyāna).—§ 343: One day, when the Pāṇḍavas were grieving for Arjuna, Bhīma asked Yudhishṭhira to permit him to go and slay Duryodhana, interpreting the time to be complete ("as in the Veda a day is often equivalent to a year, when passed in suffering") (kṛcchrataḥ), but he did not prevail upon Yudhishṭhira. While they were conversing the great ṛshi Bṛhadaçva came before them, and, asked by Yudhishṭhira if there was on earth a king more unfortunate than himself, he said that he would narrate a history of a prince more miserable than Yudhishṭhira, viz. Nala (the son of the Nishadha king Vīrasena), who, defeated deceitfully by Pushkara (the brother of Nala, v. 2296), dwelt in the woods with his spouse, having neither slaves nor chariots nor brothers nor friends with him (III, 52).—§ 344: Bṛhadaçva said: The Nishadha king Nala, the son of Vīrasena, was above all kings, etc., and fond of dice.

The Vidarbha king Bhīma was granted by the Brahmarshi Damana a daughter, Damayantī, and three excellent sons, Dama, Dānta, and Damana. Both Nala and Damayantī had not their equals in beauty, and, continually hearing of each other's virtues, they conceived attachment to each other, though they had never seen each other. Once Nala in his garden saw a number of golden-winged swans and caught one of them, but let it loose, as it promised to speak well of him before Damayantī. The swans having arrived at the Vidarbha country, the one who had been caught by Nala led Damayantī to a secluded spot and fulfilled its mission. Damayantī caused it to speak to Nala of her (III, 53).—§ 345: As Damayantī became sick of love, her father invited all the kings to her svayaṃvara. At this time the ṛshis of the gods Nārada and Parvata, having arrived in course of their wanderings at the regions of Indra, told him that the kings did not now come to him because they were intent on the svayaṃvara of Damayantī. Hearing this, the Lokapālas set out on their vehicles for the svayaṃvara, but seeing Nala on the way and filled with astonishment at his beauty, they left their chariots in the sky and asked Nala to be their messenger (III, 54). Nala promised to do so, but when Indra told him to go to Damayantī and tell her that Indra, Agni, Varuṇa, and Yama desired her to choose one of them for her lord, he asked them to spare him as he had come with the same object; but, as they insisted that he should stand by his promise, he by their power entered without being perceived by the guardians into the apartments of Damayantī, and, saying his name, fulfilled his mission (III, 55). Damayantī declared that if she did not become the wife of Nala himself she would resort to poison, or fire, or water, or the rope. Nala advised her to choose one of the gods, maintaining that having come in a different mission he dared not seek his own interest. Damayantī then told him to come to her svayaṃvara in company with the gods, then she would choose him, at which no blame would be his, and Nala returned to the Lokapālas and told them what had happened (III, 56). At the sacred hour of the holy lunar day of the auspicious season Bhīma summoned the kings to the svayaṃvara, and that assembly of kings resembled the Bhogavatī swarming with Nāgas. Damayantī, beholding five persons all alike in appearance, and recollecting the marks of the celestials, of which she had heard from old people, was unable to distinguish which of them was Nala. Filled with grief, she then decided upon seeking the protection of the gods themselves, and prevailed upon them that they assumed their true shapes. Thereupon she beheld the gods unmoistened with perspiration, with unwinking eyes and unfading garlands, not stained with dust, and staying without touching the ground, while Nala was revealed by his shadow, his fading garlands, and by his being stained with dust and sweat, and resting on the ground with winking eyes. She then chose Nala, seizing the hem of his garment and placing a floral wreath round his neck. Nala promised Damayantī that he would remain hers as long as he lived, and she spoke words of like import to him. The Lokapālas bestowed each a couple of boons on Nala: Indra, that he should be able to behold his divine nature in sacrifices, and blessed regions thereafter (gatim anuttamāṃ); Agni, his own presence wherever he wished and regions as bright as himself; Yama, subtle taste in food and pre-eminence in virtue; Varuṇa, water wherever he desired and garlands of celestial fragrance. Then the gods went to heaven and the kings returned home. Nala, after the wedding, stayed there for a time, returned home, ruled righteously, and celebrated the horse-sacrifice, etc. He begat the son Indrasena and the daughter Indrasenā upon Damayantī (III, 57).—§ 346: When the Lokapālas were returning they met Dvāpara with Kali going to the svayaṃvara, and Indra told Kali that Damayantī had already chosen Nala. As Kali threatened to avenge himself he was rebuked by the Lokapālas, as Nala had studied the four Vedas with the Ākhyāna as the fifth, etc. When the gods had gone to heaven, Kali said that he would take possession of Nala and deprive him of his kingdom, and asked Dvāpara to enter the dice (III, 58). Kali then went to the country of the Nishadhas and always watched for an opportunity. At last, in the twelfth year, when Nala, after answering a call of nature, touching water had said his twilight prayers without having washed his feet, Kali entered his person. Then Kali becoming Vṛsha ("vṛsho gavāṃ," the principal die, Nīl.) (PCR. thinks we ought to read that "Dvāpara also approached Pushkara becoming Vṛsha") prevailed upon Pushkara, that he challenged Nala to a match of dice in order to acquire his kingdom. Nala and Pushkara gambled together for many months, Nala being always worsted; no one amongst his friends could succeed in dissuading him from the play; at last they came in a body, which was told by the sūta to Damayantī, who in vain represented it to Nala; he uttered not a word in reply (III, 59). Seeing that Nala had lost everything, Damayantī told her nurse and maidservant Bṛhatsenā to summon the councillors in the name of Nala and tell them what had been lost; the councillors approached Nala, and Damayantī informed him that the citizens had come again in a body, but he regarded her not. She then caused Bṛhatsenā to summon the sūta Vārshṇeya, who at her request yoked Nala's favourite horses and brought her two children to Kuṇḍina (the city of Bhīma, Nīl.). There he left the children, the chariot, and the horses, and went to Ayodhyā, where he entered the service of king Ṛtuparṇa (the king of Koçala, v. 2877) as a charioteer (III, 60).—§ 347: At last, when Pushkara had won all Nala's wealth and his kingdom, he proposed to him to stake Damayantī. But Nala, feeling as if his heart would burst and gazing at Pushkara in anguish without speaking a word, took all the ornaments off his body, and attired in a single piece of cloth left the city accompanied by Damayantī. They stayed for three nights in the outskirts of the city, living on water alone. Nobody showed him hospitable regards, as Pushkara had proclaimed through the city that he that should show any attention to Nala would be put to death. After many days Nala saw some birds of golden hue and covered them with his cloth in order to catch them, but they rose up to the sky taking away that garment of his, and then told him they were the dice that had come hither to take away even his cloth. Nala proposed to Damayantī to leave him, pointing out to her the roads to Avantī, Ṛkshavat, Vindhya, Payoshnī, Vidarbha, Koçala (C. Koçalāṃ, B. and Bopp Koçalān), and the south. But she would not leave him, but suggested that they should go to Vidarbha (III, 61). Nala refused to appear before Bhīma in his state of misery. They went on attired in the same piece of cloth. Once when Damayantī had fallen into a profound slumber in a shed for travellers (sabhā), Nala, influenced by Kali, resolved upon deserting Damayantī, as separated from him

she might perchance wander to her relatives. With a sword that he found near the shed he cut off one half of the cloth and throwing the instrument away departed, having first returned again and again, dragged away by Kali, but drawn back by love (III, 62). When Damayantī awoke, she lamented and cursed the being through whose imprecation Nala suffered woe, saying that it should lead a still more miserable life. Thereupon, wandering on, she was seized by a gigantic serpent and rescued by a hunter; as the hunter, after comforting her, tried to force her to love him, he was cursed by her and fell down lifeless upon the ground (III, 63). Description of the forest, Damayantī's lamentations. She went in a northerly direction for three days and nights, then she came to an asylum of ascetics, who told her that she should again become happy together with Nala. Then the asylum disappeared. Sometime afterwards, having proceeded a long way, she met with a body of merchants landing on the banks of a river; its leader was Çuci (v. 2529, "so help us now, Maṇibhadra, the king of Yakshas"), and it was bound for the city of the Cedi king Subāhu (III, 64). Damayantī followed the caravan. Once, at midnight, the caravan was destroyed by wild elephants and many men were trodden to death, which some ascribed to their not having worshipped Maṇibhadra or Vaiçravaṇa, the kings of Yakshas, others to their having received Damayantī, whom they thought to be a Rākshasa or Piçāca or Yaksha woman, and resolved upon killing her when they saw her. Hearing this Damayantī fled. The next day the remnant of the caravan left the place. Damayantī, with the brahmans that had survived the slaughter of the caravan, came towards evening to the city of the Cedi king Subāhu. The boys began to follow her; when she came before the palace of the king, the queen-mother let the nurse take her in. Damayantī agreed to stay there on the conditions that she should not eat remnants, not wash anyone's feet, nor speak with other men, but be protected against all aspirations. The queen gave her as a sairindhrī to her daughter Sunandā (III, 65).—§ 348: Nala, having deserted Damayantī, saw a conflagration in the forest and therefrom heard a voice calling him by name and saw the Nāga Karkoṭaka, who, unable to stir, told him that he had deceived the great ṛshi Nārada and been cursed by him with the words: "Stay thou here immobile until Nala takes thee hence, then thou shalt be freed from my curse," and asked him to deliver him and promised to instruct him in respect of his welfare. The snake then became as small as a thumb, and Nala taking him up went to a spot free from fire. Karkoṭaka let him proceed yet counting his steps, and bit him at the tenth step (adaçad daçame pade) (see Nīl. and PCR.). Then the form of Nala was changed, in order that people might not recognize him, and Karkoṭaka assumed his own form, and said that Kali dwelling in Nala should be tortured by his venom, and that Nala should have no fear from animals with fangs, from enemies, and from men versed in the Veda (brahmavidbhyaḥ), and told him to go to Ayodhyā and present himself as a sūta Bāhuka before Ṛtuparṇa (of the race of Ikshvāku), who would give Nala his skill in dice (akshahṛdaya) in exchange for Nala's knowledge of horses (açvahṛdaya), and when he had become an adept at dice he should have prosperity and meet with his wife and children and regain his kingdom. The Nāga king then gave Nala two pieces of celestial cloth, saying that when he desired to get back his own form he should remember him and wear this garment. Then he disappeared (III, 66).—§ 349: On the tenth day Nala entered the city of Ṛtuparṇa; he approached the king and named himself Bāhuka, and said that he surpassed everybody in managing steeds and might be consulted in matters of difficulty (arthakṛcchreshu) and affairs of skill (naipuṇeshu), and that he was versed in the art of cooking. Then he was appointed superintendent of Ṛtuparṇa's horses on a pay of 10,000, and Vārshṇeya and Jīvala should be under his direction. Every evening he recited the çloka, "Where lies that helpless one (tapasvinī) afflicted with hunger and thirst and worn with toil (çrāntā), or upon whom does she now wait (upatishṭhati)?" Once Jīvala asked him who she was, and Nala related to him the main features of his story without naming her or himself (III, 67).—§ 350: Bhīma sent out brahmans in all directions to search for Nala and Damayantī, promising 1,000 kine, etc., to him that should find them. At length the brahman Sudeva, the friend of Damayantī's brother, recognized Damayantī in the city of the Cedis, seated with Sunandā during the time of the king's prayers (puṇyāhavācane rājñaḥ), and told her who he was and that her relatives and children were well. Beholding Damayantī weeping and conversing in private with Sudeva, Sunandā caused her mother to question Sudeva (III, 68). Sudeva told the story of Damayantī, and that he had recognized her by a mole between her eyebrows, which was now almost covered with dust as her whole body. Then Sunandā washed away the dust and the queen-mother recognized her by the mole as the daughter of her sister, as she and Damayantī's mother were both daughters of the Daçārṇa king Sudāman, and she herself had been bestowed on Vīrabāhu and her sister on Bhīma; she had witnessed Damayantī's birth in the palace of her father in the Daçārṇa country. At her own request Damayantī was brought in a litter carried by men and protected by a large escort to the city of Bhīma, and was received with respect and worshipped the gods and brahmans. Bhīma gave unto Sudeva 1,000 kine, etc. The next day Damayantī let her mother cause Bhīma to send brahmans out in all directions to seek for Nala. Damayantī ordered them everywhere to recite the çlokas: "O beloved gambler, where hast thou gone, cutting off half of my garment," etc., but to take care that no one knew that it was on her command (III, 69).—§ 351: After a long time the brahman Parṇāda told that he had in Ayodhyā visited Bhāṅgāsuri (i.e. Ṛtuparṇa), and that Bāhuka had been affected by hearing his çloka, and had said to him: "Chaste women, though overtaken by calamity, yet protect themselves," etc. Damayantī then thanked Parṇāda and promised him great wealth and consulted with her mother, and, without Bhīma's knowing it, sent Sudeva, who told Ṛtuparṇa that to-morrow Damayantī would hold another svayaṃvara (III, 70). When ordered by Ṛtuparṇa to conduct him to the svayaṃvara of Damayantī, Bāhuka felt his heart bursting with grief, but promised to go there in a single day; he yoked four horses born in Sindhu (description of their marks), made Vārshṇeya sit on the chariot, and set out with so great speed that Vārshṇeya thought he must be Mātali or Çālihotra, who had taken a human shape, or Nala (III, 71).—§ 352: As the chariot was coursing thus, Ṛtuparṇa lost his upper garment, and Nala declared that it was impossible to recover it, as they had already travelled one yojana thence. As Ṛtuparṇa rightly indicated the number of fruits of a vibhītaka-tree (Terminalia bellerica), and said he was skilled in dice as in numbers, Nala prevailed upon him to teach him the science and in future receive instead his science of horses. Then Kali came out from the body of Nala, vomiting the poison of Karkoṭaka, and assumed his own shape, as the fire of Damayantī's curse had left him, but remained invisible to others except Nala. Kali prevailed upon Nala that he should not curse him, promising that those men who would attentively recite his history should be free from fear of him, and entered the vibhītaka-tree till Nala had gone far away. Then Kali returned to his abode. From the touch of Kali the vibhītaka-tree from that hour fell into disrepute. Nala now became free from calamity, though he did not assume his original form (III, 72).—§ 353: At night they arrived at Kuṇḍina, having passed 100 yojanas. The steeds of Nala that were in that city, and peacocks and elephants and Damayantī recognized the sound of Nala's chariot; Damayantī ascended the terrace with the desire of seeing Nala. The Koçala king (Ṛtuparṇa) wondered, as he did not hear any talk of the svayaṃvara, etc., and Bhīma thought that he had come simply to pay his respects. When Ṛtuparṇa had gone to his appointed quarters with Vārshṇeya, and Bāhuka, having tended the horses, was sitting at the side of the chariot, Damayantī sent a female messenger in search of Nala (III, 73). The female messenger Keçinī asked Bāhuka about Vārshṇeya and himself; he said that Vārshṇeya was the charioteer of Nala, that nobody knew Nala except Nala himself and his wife, as he did not discover his marks of identity anywhere, and that he himself was the charioteer and cook of king Ṛtuparṇa; at last she repeated the çloka of Parṇāda: "O beloved gambler," etc., and said that Damayantī wished again to hear the reply he had given Parṇāda; then Bāhuka, weeping, said: "Chaste women, though overtaken by calamity," etc., and Keçinī went to Damayantī and acquainted her with everything (III, 74). Damayantī again sent Keçinī to stay in silence at Bāhuka's side and mark his conduct; she related that low passages grew in height so that he might pass through them easily, that when he approached narrow holes opened wide, that only by his looking upon them the vessels became filled with water, that when he held a handful of grass in the sun the fire blazed up all of a sudden, that he touched fire and was not hurt, that water falling at his will flowed in a stream, and that flowers pressed with his hands became gayer and more fragrant than before. Damayantī then caused Keçinī without Bāhuka's knowledge to bring her some meat that had been boiled and dressed by him, from the kitchen, and recognized the taste. She then sent her two children with Keçinī. Bāhuka embraced them crying aloud, saying they were like his own children, and sent Keçinī away lest people might think "evil" (III, 75). Having obtained the consent both of her father and mother, Damayantī caused Nala to be brought to her apartments; it came to an explication; Damayantī declared that she had feigned to hold a second svayaṃvara because no one except Nala could in one day manage 100 yojanas with horses, and swore by the Air, Sun, and Moon ("who dwells as a witness within every creature," v. 2989), who had been her protector for these three years, and Vāyu bore witness to the truth of her words. Then a floral shower fell there, and the celestial kettledrum began to play. Nala then wore the garment he had received from the serpent king and regained his old form. Thus Nala in the fourth year was reunited with his wife (III, 76). The next day they presented themselves before Bhīma. The citizens were in great joy and adorned (arcitāni) the temples (devatāyatanāni), etc. Ṛtuparṇa asked Nala's forgiveness, and Nala also asked Ṛtuparṇa's forgiveness, and made over to him his horse-lore, having obtained from him the mystery of dice. Then Ṛtuparṇa went away to his own city, employing another person as his charioteer (III, 77).—§ 354: Having dwelt for a month at Kuṇḍina, Nala set out for the Nishadha country with a single white chariot, sixteen elephants, fifty horses, and 600 infantry, and proposed to Pushkara that they should gamble again, as Nala had won great wealth; the stake should be Damayantī, wealth and kingdom, and their lives; if not, he proposed a single combat. Pushkara, hoping to win Damayantī, whom he loved, gladly consented to gamble, and lost at a single throw. Nala, declaring that it was Kali who had done it all, forgave his brother and granted him his portion, and after a month let him go to his own town. All the citizens and subjects rejoiced at Nala's return (III, 78). Then Nala with a large force brought Damayantī and his children home, and passed his days in joy and performed numerous sacrifices with abundant gifts to brahmans.—§ 355: "So thou also, O Yudhishṭhira, wilt blaze forth in effulgence soon. They that will repeatedly recite this history of Nala and they that will hear it recited will never be touched by adversity." As Yudhishṭhira feared that some one skilled in dice might summon him, Bṛhadaçva taught him the science of dice (akshahṛdaya) and then went to Açvaçiras for a bathe. Yudhishṭhira then learnt from brahmans and ascetics from various directions that Arjuna was still engaged in ascetic penances, and Yudhishṭhira grieved for him (III, 79).

Nāradāgamana ("the arrival of Nārada"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 355 (°ṃ parva, i.e. Nāradāgamanaparvan).

[Nāradāgamanaparvan] ("the section containing the arrival of Nārada," the ninety-seventh of the minor parvans of Mahābhārata; cf. Nāradāgamana).—§ 792: Vaiçampāyana said: Two years after their return from the retreat of Dhṛtarāshṭra the Pāṇḍavas were visited by D.-ṛ. Nārada. Yudhishṭhira inquired after Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc. Nārada said: After thy return from Kurukshetra, Dhṛtarāshṭra proceeded towards Gaṅgādvāra with the sacrificial fire and Gāndhārī, Kuntī, Sañjaya, and all the yājakas. They themselves took to severe austerities (description), while the sacred fire was duly worshipped by the yājakas. They wandered about, Sañjaya acting as a guide, Pṛthā becoming the eye of Gāndhārī. Once Dhṛtarāshṭra bathed in the Gaṅgā, and was returning to his retreat. A violent forest conflagration set in; Dhṛtarāshṭra dismissed Sañjaya and sat down, facing the east, with Gāndhārī and Kuntī; they concentrated their soul, and were burnt by the conflagration. Sañjaya escaped and was seen by me (Nārada) on the banks of the Gaṅgā in the midst of ascetics; he bade them farewell and started for Himavat. In the course of my wanderings I saw the three bodies. The ascetics, from whom I heard all the details, did not at all grieve for them. Vaiçampāyana said: The Pāṇḍavas and the citizens felt great grief (XV, 37). Yudhishṭhira lamented (α) (XV, 38). Nārada comforted Yudhishṭhira by informing him of the sacred character of the fire that had burnt Dhṛtarāshṭra and the two queens. When Dhṛtarāshṭra entered the woods he caused his sacrificial fires to be duly ignited; having performed his sacred rites with them he abandoned them all; then the Yājakas had left them in a solitary part of the wood and gone away; the fires thus left to themselves produced a general conflagration; "this is what I have heard from the ascetics on the Gaṅgā." Vaiçampāyana said: Headed by Yuyutsu the Pāṇḍavas and the citizens all proceeded to the Gaṅgā in order to offer oblations of water to the deceased king and queens. Then they came back, taking up their residence outside the city. Yudhishṭhira sent a number of men to the retreat to cremate the remains of his uncle, aunt, and mother in due form. On the twelfth day he performed the çrāddhas with gifts in abundance (description). Then all returned to Hāstinapura. The great Ṛ. Nārada, having comforted Yudhishṭhira, went away. Dhṛtarāshṭra had passed three years in the forest and fifteen years in the city. Yudhishṭhira was plunged in grief [*; not in B.] (XV, 39).

[Nārada-Parvatopākhyāna(ṃ)] ("the episode relating to Nārada and Parvata"). § 633*b* (Rājadh.): Ṛ. Nārada and his sister's son Parvata had in days of old left heaven for a pleasant ramble on earth in order to taste clarified butter and rice. They wandered under a compact of telling each other their inmost thoughts. They arrived at the court of Sṛñjaya (Çvaitya). Nārada was taken with the charms of Sṛñjaya's daughter Sukumārī; but shamefulness prevented him from disclosing his love to Parvata, who then cursed him for his reticence, saying that Sukumārī should become his wife, but then she and every man should behold him in the shape of an ape. Nārada cursed Parvata in return, saying that he should not succeed in proceeding to heaven. Parvata began to wander over the earth. Sukumārī beheld Nārada as an ape, but devoted herself entirely to him, and did not desire any D., Mu., or Y. for a husband. Nārada and Parvata, after some time, became reconciled and withdrew their mutual curses. Sukumārī fled, thinking Nārada to be somebody else, but was informed by Parvata. Parvata proceeded to heaven and Nārada to his home. Kṛshṇa continued: "Ṛ. Nārada is here; he will tell thee everything that happened" (XII, 30).

Nārāṇāṃ patiḥ = Çiva: VII, 9539.

Nara-Nārāyaṇau. §561*d* (Yānasandhip.): Once Bṛhaspati and Uçanas went to Brahmán, and also the Maruts with Indra, the Vasus with Agni, the Ādityas, the Sādhyas, the seven ṛshis (saptarshayaḥ), the Gandharva Viçvāvasu, the gaṇas of Apsarases, and having bowed down to Brahmán they sat around him. Just then the two ancient deities (pūrvadevau), the Ṛshis Nara and Nārāyaṇa, left the place. Bṛhaspati said to Brahmán: "Who are these two that leave the place without worshipping thee?" Brahmán said that they were Nara and Nārāyaṇa who had come from the world of men to the world of Brahmán (so Nīl.); "worshipped by the gods and the Gandharvas they exist only for the destruction of the Asuras." Indra went to the spot where those two were practising austerities, accompanied by all the gods headed by Bṛhaspati. At that time the gods had been very much alarmed in consequence of a war with the Asuras. Indra obtained the boon that Nara and Nārāyaṇa (i.e. Arjuna and Kṛshṇa) assisted him in the battle (cf. Arjuna). Both of them, by their acts, enjoy numerous eternal and celestial regions, and are repeatedly born in the times of war. Even this is what Nārada, conversant with the Vedas, had said to the Vṛshṇis.

For some purpose that creator of the universe took his birth as the son of Dharma. On Himavat he underwent austerities for 66,000 years (description) and then for twice that period, and thus he became Bráhman (brahmabhūtaḥ) and beheld the supreme deity Çiva (c). The lotus-eyed N. recited a hymn to Mahādeva (i.e. Çiva) (given in full) (ζζ). Çiva then granted him boons, that neither gods nor the Asuras, the mahoragas, the Piçācas, the Gandharvas, men, the Rākshasas, the birds, the Nāgas, nor any creatures in the universe should ever be able to withstand his prowess, "thou shalt be superior to myself if thou ever goest to battle with me." Even that god then walked over the earth (as Kṛshṇa Vāsudeva), beguiling the universe by his illusive power. From the austerities of N. was born a great muni Nara, who was equal to N. himself. Arjuna was none else than that Nara. [Nārāyaṇāstramokshaparvan(°va)] ("the section including the hurling of the Nārāyaṇa weapon"), the 78th of the minor parvans of the Mhbhr. § 603. THE LAST PART OF THE 15TH DAY. After the fall of Droṇa, the Kurus, even Duryodhana, etc. (α), fled away, Kṛtavarman with the remnant of his Bhoja troops, etc. (β), Suçarman with the remnant of the Saṃçaptakas. Only Açvatthāman did not flee: Açvatthāman & Çikhaṇḍin, etc. (γ). Açvatthāman asked Duryodhana why the troops were fleeing away, even Karṇa's troops; Duryodhana caused Kṛpa to inform Açvatthāman of the truth (δ), at which Açvatthāman was filled with rage (VII, 193). Dhṛtarāshṭra asked Sañjaya what Açvatthāman said (ε), he who knew the weapons of men and Vāruṇa, etc. (ζ) (VII, 194). Sañjaya related: Açvatthāman complained before Duryodhana that his father has been killed (η), and vowed to destroy the Pāñcālas and the Pāṇḍavas; neither D., nor G., As., U., Rā., etc., were able to vanquish him; there were none equal to him and Arjuna in knowledge of weapons; he had a weapon (the Nārāyaṇa weapon) that neither Arjuna, etc. (θ) knew, given by Nārāyaṇa to his father as a boon, with the promise that no man should ever be his equal in battle; only, this weapon must never be used in haste, etc., and never be hurled upon persons that abandon their chariots or weapons in battle, etc.; with this he would rout and slay the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ι). The Kuru army rallied; many blew their conches, etc.; the Pāṇḍavas took counsel of one another; Açvatthāman touched water and invoked the Nārāyaṇa weapon (VII, 195). Fierce omens in nature appeared. D., Dā., and G. became inspired with fear. Dhṛtarāshṭra asked Sañjaya what counsel was adopted by the Pāṇḍavas in order to protect Dhṛshṭadyumna on seeing the retreating Kauravas once more advance to battle, rallied by Açvatthāman. Sañjaya related: Yudhishṭhira spoke about the matter to Arjuna (κ), fearing that it was Indra himself who was approaching for the sake of the Kauravas. Arjuna in reply described the prowess of Açvatthāman and the unrighteousness of the Pāṇḍavas in slaying Droṇa (λ); "all of us have passed the greater part of our lives; the days that remain to us are few; this exceedingly unrighteous act has stained that remnant"; "I did not interfere, as he was about to be slain; for this fault I have already sunk into hell, overcome with shame" (VII, 196). Bhīmasena, reproaching Arjuna, vindicated the deed (μ); "I can, with my arrows, rout the united D. with Indra at their head, and As., U., and men." Then Dhṛshṭadyumna spoke in justification of his conduct (ν) (VII, 197). Asked by Dhṛtarāshṭra (ξ), Sañjaya related: All the other persons present remained silent; Arjuna, glancing obliquely towards Dhṛshṭadyumna, seemed to reproach him with tears and sighs; Yudhishṭhira, etc. (ο) stood ashamed; Sātyaki wrathfully rebuked Dhṛshṭadyumna (π). Dhṛshṭadyumna in reply taunted Sātyaki with the slaughter of Bhūriçravas (ρ). Sātyaki rushed towards Dhṛshṭadyumna in order to slay him; Bhīma, urged by Kṛshṇa, held him back; Sahadeva endeavoured to bring about a reconciliation (σ); Dhṛshṭadyumna asked Bhīma to let him slay Sātyaki (τ); then he or Arjuna would slay the enemies. Kṛshṇa and Yudhishṭhira restored peace with great difficulty, and all the warriors proceeded to battle (VII, 198). Açvatthāman caused a great carnage among the Pāṇḍava troops (description); before Duryodhana he repeated his vow (υ). Duryodhana rallied his troops. Açvatthāman invoked the Nārāyaṇa weapon (description). The Pāṇḍavas, etc. (φ), became exceedingly agitated. Yudhishṭhira, relying on Kṛshṇa, advised Dhṛshṭadyumna to flee away with his Pāñcālas, and Sātyaki with the Vṛshṇis and Andhakas; he and his brothers would ascend a funeral pile (χ). Kṛshṇa prevailed upon the troops to lay down their weapons and alight from their chariots. Bhīmasena alone refused to do so, and dissuaded the others (ψ). Arjuna said that his vow was that the Gāṇḍīva should not be used against the Nārāyaṇa weapon, kine, and brahmans. Bhīma attacked Açvatthāman, but was overwhelmed by the energy of the Nārāyaṇa weapon (VII, 199). Arjuna covered Bhīmasena with the Vāruṇa weapon; Arjuna and Kṛshṇa, alighting from their chariot, proceeded on foot towards Bhīma and forcibly brought him down from his chariot, making him abandon his weapons. Then the Nārāyaṇa weapon became neutralized; all the quarters became clear, etc. The Pāṇḍava host stood arrayed once more. Duryodhana urged Açvatthāman to use the same weapon once more; Açvatthāman said that it could not be used twice; if brought back it would without doubt slay himself. Duryodhana then urged him to slay the enemies with other weapons. Dhṛtarāshṭra asked, what then came to pass (ω); Sañjaya related: Dhṛshṭadyumna & Açvatthāman, who deprived Dhṛshṭadyumna of his steeds, driver, and chariot; the Pāñcālas fled away. Sātyaki & Açvatthāman, who was worsted by him. Duryodhana, etc. (αα), & Sātyaki, who made them flee away deprived of their chariots. Açvatthāman (upon another chariot) & Sātyaki, who once more deprived him of his chariot and caused him to retreat; the Pāṇḍavas blew their conches, and Sātyaki slew 300 of Vṛshasena's division, etc. (αα). Açvatthāman (upon another chariot) & Sātyaki; Açvatthāman repeated his vow (ββ); Sātyaki was carried away by his driver. Açvatthāman & Dhṛshṭadyumna, who was much afflicted; Arjuna, etc. (γγ), & Açvatthāman, who slew Sudarçana (the Mālava king), Paurava (Bṛhatkshattra), and the young Cedi prince. Bhīma & Açvatthāman; Bhīma was carried away by his steeds; the Pāñcālas fled away (VII, 200). Arjuna (+ Kṛshṇa) (rallying his troops) & Açvatthāman (+ the Kauravas); Arjuna addressed Açvatthāman in harsh words (δδ). Dhṛtarāshṭra asked Sañjaya about the cause of this, as Arjuna and Açvatthāman loved each other. Sañjaya said that it was in consequence of his grief (εε). Açvatthāman became angry with Arjuna and especially with Kṛshṇa, touched water, and made use of the Āgneya weapon, from which dire omens in nature appeared, and a great slaughter in the Pāṇḍava army resulted; Rā. and Pç. uttered fierce cries, etc. (description). Arjuna invoked the Brāhma weapon: the darkness was dispelled, etc.; a full akshauhiṇī of the Pāṇḍava troops had been killed; Kṛshṇa and Arjuna were unwounded; the Pāṇḍavas rejoiced, the Kauravas wondered, Açvatthāman was disconsolate, and ran away from the fight; he met Vyāsa, and asked him the reason; "neither As., nor G., Pç., Rā., U., Y., and birds, nor men can baffle this weapon." Vyāsa told him the story of Nārāyaṇa (b); Nara and Nārāyaṇa are Arjuna and Kṛshṇa; even Açvatthāman has been born as a portion of Rudra, and was [in a former birth] endued with great wisdom, regarding the universe to consist only of Mahādeva, etc., and Çiva had granted him numerous boons, and he had, in every Yuga, adored the great god in his Phallic form. Kṛshṇa had sprung from Rudra himself, and always worshipped him, regarding his Phallic emblem as the origin of the universe, and he viewed the identity of Bráhman with the universe; D., Si., and M.-ṛ. adore Kṛshṇa in order to attain to Mahādeva; Kṛshṇa is the Creator of everything; the eternal Kṛshṇa should be adored with sacrifices, etc. Açvatthāman bowed unto Rudra, regarded Kṛshṇa as worthy of the highest regards, and became filled with delight, the marks whereof appeared on his body. Bowing to Vyāsa, he caused the army to be withdrawn, and so did also the Pāṇḍavas. Having fought for five days . . . , Droṇa repaired to Brahmaloka (VII, 201). Arjuna met with Vyāsa and inquired of him about the invisible person who aided him in the battle; Vyāsa said that it was Mahādeva himself, and recited a long enumeration of his attributes (ηη); if Mahādeva becomes angry, neither D., nor As., G., Rā., even if they hide themselves in deep caves, can have peace. In days of yore Mahādeva destroyed the sacrifice of Daksha; the Sacrifice fled away, and D. and As. fell down and submitted to Mahādeva, the Nāgas and Ṛ. became agitated, etc.; Pūshan was eating the puroḍāça: Çiva tore out his teeth; the gods assigned to Rudra a substantial share in sacrifices; he then re-established the sacrifice. Then Vyāsa related the destruction of Tripura (d). He [Çiva] is Rudra, etc. (ιι). Explanation of some of the names of Mahādeva (κκ). Blessings upon the reader, especially the readers of the Çatarudriya (λλ) (VII, 202).

Nārāyaṇī ("the daughter of Nārāyaṇa"?) = Indrasenā[2]: III, 10093 (I°); IV, 651 (I°).

Nārāyaṇīya, adj. ("relating to Nārāyaṇa"). § 717*b* (Nārāyaṇīya): XII, 347, 13442 (°m ākhyānaṃ, i.e. Nārāyaṇīya).

[Nārāyaṇīya(ṃ)] ("the section treating of Nārāyaṇa"): § 717*b* (Mokshadh.). Bhīshma said: "I heard it from my father that in the Kṛta age, during the epoch of Manu Svāyambhuva, the eternal Nārāyaṇa, the Soul of the universe, took birth as the son of Dharma in a quadruple form: as Nara, Nārāyaṇa, Hari, and the Self-existent (Svayambhuvaḥ!) Kṛshṇa. Amongst them all, Nārāyaṇa and Nara practised the several austerities, repairing to the Himālayan hermitage Badarī and riding in their golden chariot (description; v. the note of PCR., p. 740). Nārada dropped down on Gandhamādana from a summit of Meru and wandered over all the world, and at last repaired to Badarī at the hour of Nara's and Nārāyaṇa's performing their daily rites. He said to himself: this is truly the abode of that Being in whom are established all the worlds including D., As., G., K., and M.-U.; in this spot Kṛshṇa and Hari dwelt formerly; what is that deity whom these two worship? who are these Pitṛs whom these two Pitṛs of all beings adore?" Ṛ. Nārada, bowing unto Mahādeva, praised Nārāyaṇa ("sung in the Vedas, Purāṇas, Aṅgas, and Upāṅgas"), and asked what god or Pitṛ he was sacrificing to. Nārāyaṇa said that about this topic nothing should be said, as it was an ancient mystery; but because of his devotion he instructed him about Kshetrajña, etc. The twenty-one Prajāpatis: Brahmán, etc. (a) were first born, and obeyed the eternal law of the Supreme God (XII, 335). Nārada (Pārameshṭhya) proceeded to Çvetadvīpa ("White Island") to behold Nārāyaṇa in his original shape; by yoga he soared into the firmament, rested for a short while on a summit of Meru, then he directed his eyes towards the north-west, and north of the milky ocean he saw the large island Çvetadvīpa, more than 32,000 yojanas from Meru; the inhabitants of that realm have no senses, etc. (description); they are white and free from every sin, etc. Yudhishṭhira asked for further information about this people. Bhīshma related the story of Uparicara (c), "the essence of all narratives," which he had heard from his father (XII, 336-8). Arrived at Çvetadvīpa, Nārada stood in yoga and hymned Nārāyaṇa (ζ) [i.e. Mahāpurushastava] (XII, 339). Nārāyaṇa showed himself to Nārada, bearing all forms (viçvarūpadhṛk; enumeration), uttering with his mouths Gāyatrī, oṃ, and the Āraṇyaka, and the four Vedas; he mentioned Ekata, Dvita, and Trita, and instructed Nārada (η). Vāsudeva = Soul = Jīva = Çesha = Saṅkarshaṇa (when he takes birth as Jīva) = Kshetrajña; > Sanatkumāra = Mind = Pradyumna; > the Creator = Aniruddha = Īçāna = Īçvara = Ahaṅkāra. "I am known as Purusha; without acts I am the 25th. Hiraṇyagarbha, etc. (θ), are in me." Nārāyaṇa's boons to Brahmán in days of yore. "I am Kapila, etc. (ι). Brahmán springs from Aniruddha's navel." The feats that Nārāyaṇa will perform (those that he will slay; his incarnations) (κ); "in the Tretā age I shall take birth as Rāma of Bhṛgu's race . . .; in the twilight (sandhyāṃçe) between Tretā and Dvāpara I shall take birth as Rāma Dāçarathi; at that time Ekata and Dvita (in consequence of their injury to Trita) will have to take birth as apes; all those apes shall become my allies . . .; in the period (sandhau) joining the Dvāpara and the Kali I shall take birth in Mathurā in order to slay Kaṃsa, and take up my residence in Kuçasthalī [at] Dvārakā; I shall transplant Prāgjyotisha to Dvārakā, and subjugate Maheçvara and Mahāsena (i.e. Skanda), who will help Dā. Bāṇa (with 1,000 arms); . . . Brahmán himself never obtained a sight of me in this shape of mine, which thou hast seen to-day." Hari then disappeared; Nārada returned to Badarī, to behold Nara and Nārāyaṇa. This great Upanishad, consistent with the four Vedas and with Sāṅkhya-Yoga, and called Pāñcarātra, and recited by Nārāyaṇa himself, was repeated by Nārada in the abode of Brahmán. Yudhishṭhira asked: "Was not Brahmán acquainted with this wonderful narrative of the glory of Nārāyaṇa?" Bhīshma said that it was only to Ṛ. in the abode of Brahmán that Nārada recited his narrative. The propagation of the narrative: Ṛ. > Sūrya > 66,000 Ṛ. in Sūrya's train, etc., > D. on Meru > Asita > the Pitṛs; "I heard it from my father Çāntanu; it is a Purāṇa, and should not be communicated to anyone that is not a worshipper of Vāsudeva; it is really the essence of the hundreds of other narratives thou hast heard from me; in days of yore, D. and As., uniting together, churned the ocean for the amṛta; after the same manner, the brahmans in days of yore, uniting together, churned all the scriptures and raised this narrative." He who reads this becomes an inhabitant of Çvetadvīpa, etc.—Vaiçampāyana said: Yudhishṭhira and all his brothers became devoted to Nārāyaṇa; Vyāsa visited (through the sky) the ocean of milk (which is always the abode of nectar), and worshipping the great God there, he came back to his own hermitage.—Bhīshma said: "I have now repeated the narrative that was recited to Nārada; that narrative has descended from person to person from very ancient times; I heard it from my father."—Sūta said: "I have now told you all that Vaiçampāyana recited to Janamejaya. King Janamejaya properly discharged all his duties according to the scriptures. You have all undergone severe penances, etc.; residing in this sacred Naimisha forest, ye are . . . conversant with the Vedas, . . . ye have come to this sacrifice of Çaunaka; do ye all adore . . . Nārāyaṇa. I heard this excellent narrative, that has descended from generation to generation, from my father in former times" (XII, 340).—Çaunaka asked about pravṛtti and nivṛtti, etc. Sauti recited the discourse of Vaiçampāyana to Janamejaya. Janamejaya said that the whole world with Brahmán, D., As., and men are deeply attached to acts; Brahmán, etc. (λ), have adopted the religion of pravṛtti. Vaiçampāyana said that this question related to a deep mystery, and that it required penances and acquaintance with the Purāṇas; he recited what M.-ṛ. Vyāsa said to his disciples Sumantu, etc. (μ) (as he used to teach them the four Vedas and Mahābhārata as the fifth), on Meru (inhabited by Si. and Cā.); Nārāyaṇa had been gratified by his penances on the shore of the ocean of milk, and he had, with the eye of knowledge, beheld all that occurred in the beginning of the Kalpa: Mahā-Purusha or Paramātmā (according to both Sāṅkhya and Yoga) > Avyakta (Pradhāna) > Aniruddha (mahān ātmā, Ahaṅkāra) > Pitāmaha (i.e. Brahmán); from Ahaṅkāra have sprung the five elements (mahābhūtāni); Marīci, etc. (ν), are the eight Prakṛtis, upon whom all the worlds depend; Brahmán created them with the Vedas, Vedāṅgas, etc.; Rudra (from the principle of wrath) > ten Rudras: these eleven Rudras = Vikārapurushāḥ . . . Brahmán with the R., Prakṛtis, and D.-ṛ. repaired to the northern shore of the ocean of milk and practised the penances named mahāniyama (declared by Brahmán in the Vedas) for 1,000 celestial years (description); then Hari spoke to them, saying that he would invest them with pravṛtti. They performed a sacrifice in honour of Vishṇu according to the ordinances laid down for the Kṛta age. The great god was pleased and said that their pravṛtti should be fraught with ends whence there will be return; "Marīci, etc. (ξ), the seven Ṛ. who are mānasāḥ (spiritual sons of Brahmán) will become the preceptors of the Vedas, wedded to the religion of pravṛtti, and created for procreating offspring (Prājāpatye); . . . Sana, etc. (ο), these seven Ṛ. who are spiritual (mānasāḥ) sons of Brahmán, and whose knowledge comes to them of itself, are wedded to the religion of nivṛtti, conversant with Yoga and Sāṅkhya, and cause the religion of nivṛtti to flow in the worlds. Kshetrajña is myself . . . Brahmán's son Rudra has sprung from his brow at his command . . . In the Kṛta-yuga living creatures should not be slain in the sacrifices; in the Tretā-yuga animals, dedicated with mantras, will be slain in the sacrifices; then comes the mixed (miçraḥ) yuga Dvāpara; then Tishya with Kali in the van." Vyāsa continued: D. and Ṛ. went away. Only Brahmán remained, desirous of beholding the great god, then residing in the form of Aniruddha; the god then showed himself to Brahmán with a vast equine head, etc. (description), saying that at times he would appear in incarnate forms. Then he disappeared, and Brahmán proceeded to his own region. "Do you bow to him who is the lord of the Rudras, etc. (π)." Blessing upon the reader (XII, 341). Janamejaya inquired of the meaning of the different names of Nārāyaṇa; Vaiçampāyana related what Keçava (Kṛshṇa) had said to Phālguna (Arjuna), when the latter asked him about the signification of his names mentioned by M.-ṛ. in the Vedas and the Purāṇas. Kṛshṇa said: In the Ṛgveda, etc. (ρ), many are the names that have been mentioned by M.-ṛ.; "from Nārāyaṇa's [as Aniruddha] grace has arisen Brahmán, and from his wrath has arisen Rudra"; description of Rudra (σ); "I adored in days of yore the ancient Rudra for obtaining the boon of a son; Brahmán, etc. (τ), adore Hari Nārāyaṇa (Vishṇu)." Etymology of Nārāyaṇa, etc. (υ); "Ṛ Trita, the eldest (ādyaḥ) son of Brahmán, when thrown into a well by Ekata and Dvita, invoked me as Pṛçnigarbha and was rescued from the pit; Dīrghatamas (§ 170) invoked me as Keçava, became cured of his blindness, and then came to be called Gotama (v. Nīl.); Agni and Soma, blending together, became transfused in one and the same substance (ekayonitvam āgataḥ) . . . , in the Purāṇa this is said, and further that the gods have Agni for their mouth" (XII, 342). Asked by Arjuna about the unity of nature of Agni and Soma, Kṛshṇa related this ancient story: I) When only the infinite water (quotation of the çruti) exists (called tamas), Brâhman > Purusha > Brahmán, who caused Agni (the kshatra) and Soma (brâhman, i.e. the brahmans) to spring from his own eyes (quotation of the çruti relating to Agni); Agni is the hotṛ and the brahmán of the sacrifice; he who offers food in the mouth of a brahman is said to pour libations into the sacred fire for gratifying the deities (quotation from Çatapatha-brāhmaṇa); in this way brahmans have come to be regarded as Agni. Agni is again Vishṇu (quoting Sanatkumāra).—II) By Gautama's curse (for his assault on Ahalyā), Indra got a green beard; through the curse of Kauçika, Indra lost his testicles and got those of a ram.—III) As Indra with uplifted thunderbolt would prevent the Açvins from receiving a share in sacrifice (graha-), Cyavana paralysed his arms.—IV) Incensed at the destruction of his sacrifice, Daksha by his austerities caused a third eye to appear on the forehead of Rudra.—V) When Rudra would destroy Tripura, Uçanas tore a matted lock from his head and hurled it at Rudra, whence serpents began to bite Rudra, whose throat became blue, just as in the Svāyambhuva Manvantara, when Nārāyaṇa seized Rudra by the throat.—VI) When Angiras Bṛhaspati sat [on the shores of the ocean] to make preparation for the churning in order to raise the amṛta and touched water (upaspṛçataḥ), the water was not clear (na prasāddam gatavatyaḥ); he became angry and [cursed] the ocean, saying: "From this day thou shalt be tainted with fishes, etc."—VII) Viçvarūpa Triçiras Tvāshṭra was the purohita of the gods; he was the sister-son of the Asuras; while publicly offering to the deities he secretly offered shares to the Asuras; the Asuras with Hiraṇyakaçipu at their head prevailed upon him through his mother, that he (who had come to the Nandana wood) should aid Hiraṇyakaçipu, who was cursed by Hairaṇyagarbha Vasishṭha, saying: "Since thou hast chosen another hotṛ, thy sacrifice shall not be completed, and thou shalt be slain by a hitherto unknown kind of being." Viçvarūpa performed austere tapas; Indra sent Apsarases, of whom Viçvarūpa became enamoured, and he promised to destroy Indra and the gods; he uttered mantras by which he grew; with one mouth he drank all the soma that was offered to the gods by the brahmans in all the worlds; with one [he ate] food; with one [he drank the energy of all] the gods, including Indra. These repaired to Brahmán (so B.; Brāhmaṇaṃ, C.), and according to his counsel they prevailed upon Ṛ. Bhārgava Dadhīca, that he should abandon his body by his yoga power; his bones Dhātṛ shaped into a thunderbolt (vajra), which was pervaded by the energy of Vishṇu; with this vajra Indra struck Viçvarūpa, and severed the heads from the body. By the pressing (mathana) of his limbs Vṛtra came into existence, whom Indra slew. Terrified with the double brahmanicide, Indra abandoned the sovereignty of the gods; he entered a cool lotus-stalk in the Mānasa lake, and becoming very minute (aṇumātraḥ) by his yoga power (aiçvarya-yogāt) he entered the fibres of that lotus-stalk. Now rajas and tamas assailed the deities; the mantras of M.-ṛ. lost their efficacy (na prāvartanta), Rā. appeared; the Vedas (Brahma) were about to disappear (utsādanaṃ jagāma); without an Indra, the worlds lost their strength and became easy to overwhelm. Then the gods and Ṛshis crowned Āyus' son Nahusha as king of the gods. Nahusha ruled over heaven with 500 luminaries on his forehead, which had the virtue of robbing the energy of every creature. Then follows, somewhat abbreviated, the contents of § 555 (Indra) = V, 11 foll.—VIII) In days of yore, when M.-ṛ. Bharadvāja was saying his prayers (upāspṛçat) on the shore of the celestial Gaṅgā, he was approached by Vishṇu, who was taking his three strides; Vishṇu, struck with water by Bharadvāja on the breast, received a mark [i.e. Çrīvatsa] on his breast.—IX) Cursed by M.-ṛ. Bhṛgu, Agni was obliged to become a devourer of all things.—X) Aditi cooked food for the gods to strengthen them so that they might slay the Asuras; there Budha [i.e. the planet Mercury], after completing a vow (vratacaryā-), came and asked for alms of Aditi; but she, intending that only the gods should eat it first, gave him no alms. At this Budha (Brahmabhūtaḥ) cursed Aditi, saying that she would have a pain (vyathā) in her womb; in the second birth (as an egg) of Vivasvat, the egg of [his] mother Aditi [was] killed (so B.); [therefore] Vivasvat Çrāddhadeva [became] Mārttaṇḍa.—XI) Daksha had sixty daughters, of whom he gave thirteen to Kaçyapa, ten to Dharma, ten to Manu, and twenty-seven (the Nakshatras) to Soma; although the latter were all alike in respect of beauty, etc., yet Soma became more attached to Rohiṇī, and was cursed by Daksha, etc., cf. § 615 (Prabhāsotpattikathana) = IX, 35; Prabhāsa in the western ocean was originally called Hiraṇyasaras; from this curse also have come the dark spots in the disc of the moon, exhibiting the mark of a hare.—XII) M.-ṛ. Sthūlaçiras practised austerities on the north-eastern side of Meru; a breeze, charged with all delicious perfumes, gratified him; the trees around him [from jealousy] put forth their flowers to make a display; he cursed them, saying that they should not have flowers at all times.—XIII) Nārāyaṇa, in days of yore, for the good of the world, became M.-ṛ. Vaḍavāmukha; practising austerities on Meru, he summoned the ocean; but it did not come; he then, with the heat of his body, evaporated its water and caused it to become as saltish in taste as the human sweat; it should cease to be drinkable; only to Vaḍavāmukha it should be sweet, when he drinks it; therefore, to this day, the water from the ocean is drunk only by Vaḍavāmukha, who lives within it (anuvartinā).—XIV) Umā, the daughter of the mountain Himavat, was desired in marriage by Rudra; M.-ṛ. Bhṛgu, was refused, and therefore he brought about that Himavat ceased to abound with jewels and gems. Even such is the glory of the brahman. [Almost the whole of the preceding part of this chapter is in prose.]—Etymologies of Hṛshīkeça, etc. (φ); Ṛ. Yāska, having adored me by the name of Çipivishṭa, succeeded in restoring (abhijagmivān) the Nirukta, which had disappeared into the nether regions (adho nashṭaṃ). Other identifications with Nārāyaṇa (χ); Ṛ. Pāñcāla, etc. (ψ), aided by Nārāyaṇa; etymology of Dharmaja, etc. (ω).—Asked by Arjuna about that battle between Rudra and Nārāyaṇa, Kṛshṇa related: All the universe became suddenly filled with anxiety, etc. (aa); peace was brought about by Brahmán; the mark made by Rudra's lance on Nārāyaṇa's cheek should assume the form of a beautiful whirl, and Rudra should be called Çrīkaṇṭha from the mark of Nārāyaṇa's hand on his throat.—The two Ṛ. Nara and Nārāyaṇa then made friends with Rudra, and, dismissing the gods, once more set themselves to penances. "In this way, O son of Kuntī! assuming diverse forms do I rove at will through the earth, Brahmaloka, and the high and eternal region of felicity called Goloka. That being, whom, at the time of all thy battles, thou beheldest stalking in thy van, is no other than Rudra; . . . those foes whom thou hast slain, were all, in the first instance, slain by him" (XII, 343). Çaunaka asked, why Nārada, having seen the Supreme Lord in the form of Aniruddha, again proceeded so quickly to Nara and Nārāyaṇa. Sauti said: At an interval in his snake-sacrifice, Janamejaya addressed his great-grandfather Vyāsa, asking him this same question, etc. (ββ). Vaiçampāyana answered: Leaving Çvetadvīpa, Nārada quickly proceeded to Meru, full of wonder, thence to Gandhamādana, and, traversing the sky, to Badarī, where he saw the Ṛ. [Nara and Nārāyaṇa], engaged in penances, both with Çrīvatsa and matted locks, both with "the swan's foot" on their palms, etc., each of them with four mushkas (v. the note of PCR., p. 822), sixty teeth, and four arms, etc. (description), and told them what he had seen at Çvetadvīpa, and that the marks of Nara and Nārāyaṇa were the same that he had seen on the Supreme Soul; "that realm, where he resides, the Sun warms not, etc.; having constructed an altar, measuring eight fingers' breadth, he is practising penances there, standing on one foot, etc.; whatever libations . . . are poured on the sacrificial fire by Ṛ., etc. (γγ), all reach the feet of that great deity" (XII, 344). Discourse of Nara and Nārāyaṇa to Nārada about Nārāyaṇa; "Sūrya is said to be the door [through which the emancipate must pass]; entering Sūrya, their bodies are consumed by his fire; they then become invisible . . . ; reduced to invisible atoms they then enter into Nārāyaṇa [who resides in the centre of Sūrya] > Aniruddha > (losing all physical attributes and transformed into mind alone) Pradyumna > Saṅkarshaṇa (Jīva) (both those conversant with Sāṅkhya and those that are devoted to the Supreme deity) > Kshetrajña (= Vāsudeva) divested of sattva, rajas, and tamas; . . . thou wert beheld by us in Çvetadvīpa." D.-ṛ. Nārada became entirely devoted to Nārāyaṇa, and dwelt in Badarī for 1,000 celestial years (XII, 345). Vaiçampāyana related the discourse between Nara and Nārāyaṇa on one side and Nārada on the other about the rites in honour of the Pitṛs. Nārada, the son of Daksha, was originally the son of Brahmán, created before all others by a fiat of his will. On one occasion the deities taught their children [the Pitṛs] the çrutis, and, having lost their knowledge, had to acquire it again from those sons (v. the note of PCR., p. 829); the gods and the Pitṛs, placing three piṇḍas on some blades of kuça-grass, worshipped each other. Then Nārada asked why the Pitṛs in days of yore acquired the name of piṇḍas. Nara and Nārāyaṇa said: The earth, in days of yore, disappeared, and was raised up by Govinda (Vṛshākapi) in the shape of a gigantic boar; when the hour came for his morning prayers, he, suddenly shaking off three balls of mud from his tusk, placed them upon the earth and dedicated them to his own self, saying that he was resolved to create those that were to be called Pitṛs; seeing that the three balls of mud had fallen towards the south, he declared that these should be known henceforth by the name of Pitṛs. Having then offered those piṇḍas on the Vārāha mountain, worshipping his own self, he disappeared. Therefore those who sacrifice to the Pitṛs, etc., sacrifice, etc., to Vishṇu himself (XII, 346). Vaiçampāyana continued: D.-ṛ. Nārada, after 1,000 years, repaired to his own retreat on Himavat, while Nara and Nārāyaṇa remained in Badarī, engaged in austerities; "the ancestors of that person who hates Nārāyaṇa, sink into hell for ever"; glorification of Nārāyaṇa, citing Vyāsa and referring to Harigītā (i.e. Bhagavadgītā); "Vyāsa is Nārāyaṇa on earth; who else could compile such a treatise as the Mahābhārata? Having listened to the diverse kinds of duties and resolved upon a horse-sacrifice, let thy great sacrifice go on."—Sauti continued: Formerly Nārada had recited the discourse about Nārāyaṇa to my preceptor in the hearing of many Ṛ. and the Pāṇḍavas and Kṛshṇa and Bhīshma. Sauti's eulogium on Nārāyaṇa (δδ) (XII, 347). Çaunaka said: "I have heard from thee the glory of the Supreme Soul, etc. (εε); the form of Vishṇu with the equine head, that appeared in the great ocean on the north-east was beheld by Brahmán Parameshṭhin." Çaunaka then inquired why Hari had appeared, in the form of Aniruddha with the horse-head, to Brahmán. Sauti said he would recite that which Vaiçampāyana recited to Janamejaya (in the Snake-sacrifice), who put the same question to Vaiçampāyana. Janamejaya put the question to Vaiçampāyana. Vaiçampāyana expounded how the destruction is brought about of all things; then "from the primeval darkness (fraught with immortality) arises Bráhman > Purusha = Aniruddha = Pradhāna (divested of sex) = Avyakta = Viçvaksena Hari, who, yielding to yoga-sleep (nidrāyogaṃ), lays himself down on the waters thinking of the creation; > Ahaṅkāra = Brahmán, etc. = Hiraṇyagarbha, who takes birth within the lotus [that springs] from Aniruddha. Adopting the attribute of sattva (sattvasthaḥ), Brahmán commenced to create the universe. In the primeval lotus two drops of water had been deposited by Nārāyaṇa: one like honey (madhu) which became Madhu made up of tamas; the other hard (kaṭhina) which became Kaiṭabha made up of rajas; these two Asuras (Dānavas), armed with maces, beheld within the lotus Brahmán creating the four Vedas, seized them, and dived to Rasā[-tala] in the north-eastern ocean." Brahmán complained before Īçāna (ξζ); then he hymned Hari (ηη): "my first birth from thee was due to a fiat of thy will; my second birth in days of yore was from thy eyes; my third birth was from thy speech; my fourth birth was from thy ears; my fifth birth was from thy nose; my sixth birth was from an egg; this is my seventh birth, in this lotus." Purusha rose from his slumber and assumed an equine head, he who was the abode of the Vedas; the firmament became the crown of his head, etc. (θθ); then he disappeared and proceeded to Rasā[-tala]; there he set himself to yoga, and adopting a voice according to the çikshā he began to loudly utter Vedic mantras. The two Asuras, making an appointment with the Vedas as to the time of their return, threw them down to Rasātala and ran after the sound. Meanwhile Hari took up all the Vedas and gave them to Brahmán; he placed the horse-head in the north-eastern ocean, [which horse-head], moreover, [was] the abode (ālayaṃ) of the Vedas, and thence he was called (babhūva) Açvaçiras ("horse-headed"). Returning to the lotus, Madhu and Kaiṭabha saw him in the form of Aniruddha in yoga-sleep on the water, white, endued with stainless sattva, on the hood of a snake surrounded with a garland of flames. They awakened him and were slain by him; thence he came to be called Madhusūdana. Aided then by Hari and assisted by the Vedas, Brahmán created all the worlds. Then Hari disappeared. Once more, however, he assumed the same form for the sake of the religion of pravṛtti (pravṛttidharmārthaṃ B.; C. °ttiṃ dha°). The brahman who frequently (nityaṃ) hears or mentally recites (dhārayīta) this story, will never forget his [Vedic or other] lore. Having adored with austere penances the god with the equine head, Ṛ. Pañcala [i.e. Gālava, PCR.] acquired [the science of] Krama proceeding along the path pointed out by the deity [i.e. Rudra, PCR.; cf. XII, 343, 13261-63]. Hari is the receptacle (nidhiḥ) of the Vedas, and of penances, and yoga, etc. (ιι); ṛta, etc. (κκ), has Nārāyaṇa for its soul; the Supreme Being is the cause of all this as Purusha and as Pradhāna; he is the agent, etc.; the thoughts of all, including Brahmán, etc. (λλ), are known to Keçava; but none of these can know what his thoughts are, etc.; he is called Vāsudeva because of his being the abode of all creatures; he is the eternal highest M.-ṛ., etc.; only the M.-ṛ. that have knowledge for their souls behold the eternal Purusha who transcends all attributes (guṇādhikaṃ) (XII, 348). Janamejaya said that the ekāntins [i.e. those who are devoted to Nārāyaṇa with their whole souls] at once attain to the fourth or highest end (i.e. Purushottama) without going through the three [i.e. Aniruddha, Pradyumna, and Saṅkarshaṇa; PCR.], and this end is better than that attained to by brahmans studying the Vedas with the Upanishads, etc., and by Yatis; and he asked who first promulgated the religion of Devotion.—Vaiçampāyana said: When the Pāṇḍava and the Kuru armies were drawn up in array for the battle, and Arjuna became cheerless, Kṛshṇa himself explained this religion [sc. in the Bhagavadgītā]. Having created this religion in the Kṛta age, it is borne by Nārāyaṇa himself. Nārada was questioned about it by Arjuna in the midst of Ṛ. and in the presence of Kṛshṇa and Bhīshma. My preceptor Vyāsa heard what D.-ṛ. Nārada said, and imparted it to me.—I) In that Kalpa, when Brahmán took his birth in (A) the mind of Nārāyaṇa (mānasaṃ janma) and issued from the latter's mouth, Nārāyaṇa himself performed the rites of this religion. From him it passed to Ṛ. Phenapāḥ (froth-drinking) > Vaikhānasāḥ > Soma; then it disappeared.—II) A: the eyes of Nārāyaṇa (cākshusaṃ janma): Soma > Brahmán > Rudra > Ṛ. Vālakhilyāḥ (in the Kṛta age); then it once more disappeared through the illusive power of that god [Nārāyaṇa, PCR.]. — III) A: the speech of Nārāyaṇa (vācikaṃ): Nārāyaṇa > Ṛ. Suparṇa (who recited it thrice [a day, PCR.]—triḥ parikrāntavān—whence it came to be called Trisauparṇa, referred to in the Ṛgveda) > Vāyu > Ṛ. Vighasāçinaḥ [i.e. who subsist on remains of sacrifices after feeding guests, etc.], > the ocean (mahodadhiḥ); it once more disappeared and became merged (-samāhitaḥ) into Nārāyaṇa.—IV) A: the ear of Nārāyaṇa (çravaṇajā sṛshṭiḥ): Nārāyaṇa > Brahmán (" . . . together with the Āraṇyakas") > Manu Svārocisha > his son Çaṅkhapada > his son Suvarṇābha (diçāṃ pālaṃ); when the Tretā yuga came it once more disappeared.—V) A: the nose of Nārāyaṇa (nāsatye janmani): Nārāyaṇa > Brahmán > Sanatkumāra > Prajāpati Vīraṇa (in the beginning of the Kṛta age) > the muni Raibhya > his son Kukshi (diçām pālāya); then it disappeared.—VI) A: an egg [that sprang from Hari, PCR.] (aṇḍaje janmani): Nārāyaṇa > Brahmán > Mu. Barhishads > Jyeshṭha (a brahman who had mastered the whole Sāmaveda) > king Avikalpana (B. °kampa°); then it disappeared.—VII) A: the lotus that sprang from the navel of Nārāyaṇa (this seventh birth, padmajaṃ): Nārāyaṇa > Brahmán > Daksha > his eldest daughter's son Āditya (elder brother of Savitṛ) > Vivasvat > Manu (in the beginning of the Tretā yuga) > his son Ikshvāku > the whole world; when the universal destruction comes (kshayānte) it will once more return to Nārāyaṇa.—The religion of the Yatis has been narrated to thee in the Harigītā. Nārada got it from Nārāyaṇa himself. Nārāyaṇa is adored (dṛçyate) as of one form (ekavyūhavibhāgaḥ [i.e. as Aniruddha, PCR.]), or of two [do. + Pradyumna], or three [do. + Saṅkarshaṇa] or four [do. + Vāsudeva].—Janamejaya asked why all persons do not follow the religion of Devotion. Vaiçampāyana pointed to sattva, rajas, and tamas. Hari casts a kind eye upon the person endued with sattva; only Brahmán looks kindly upon him who is overwhelmed with rajas and tamas; D. and Ṛ. are given to sattva, but [the deities] not in its subtle form.—Asked by Janamejaya how one may attain to the Supreme Being (Purushottama), and about pravṛtti, Vaiçampāyana said that the Sāṅkhya-Yoga, the Veda and Āraṇyakas (Vedāraṇyakaṃ), and the Pañcarātra are parts of one whole (parasparāṅgāni), and even this is the religion of the Ekāntins, the Sāttvika religion, the Ekāntagati of the Yatis of Çvetadvīpa (v. Çveta, pl.; differently PCR., v. the note, p. 852). Vyāsa imparted this religion to Yudhishṭhira (XII, 349).—Janamejaya asked whether the Sāṅkhya, Pañcarātra (B. Pā°), and Vedāraṇyaka are ekanishṭha ("preaching the same course of duties," PCR.) or pṛthaṅnishṭha ("preaching courses of duties different from one another," PCR.), and about pravṛtti. M.-ṛ. Vaiçampāyana said: "I bow to M.-ṛ. [Vyāsa] (cf. § 77 = I, 63), the sixth in the series beginning with Pitāmaha (Brahmán), sprung from a portion of Nārāyaṇa, the only son [of his parents], whom Nārāyaṇa in the first ages (ādikāleshu) created as his son, the unborn and ancient (ajaṃ purāṇaṃ), the great receptacle of the Vedas. Janamejaya said: When Vasishṭha > Çaktri > Parāçara > Vyāsa, how can Vyāsa be the son of Nārāyaṇa? Vaiçampāyana said: Vyāsa dwelt for some time on the Himavat; he became tired of his penances owing to the great work of composing the Mahābhārata (Bhāratam ākhyānaṃ), waited upon by his disciples, Sumantu, etc. (μμ), recapitulating (āvartayan) the Vedas, etc. (νν); asked by us, Vyāsa related: This narrative, belonging to the early times (ādikālodbhavaṃ), has become known to me through my penances. In the seventh creation, that from the lotus (prajāvisarge vai saptame padmasambhave), Brahmán being hesitating on account of the difficulty of creating, Nārāyaṇa caused Intelligence (Buddhi) to enter Brahmán, who now created Dai., Dā., G., and Rā., etc.; seeing that many of these would afflict D. and Ṛ., Nārāyaṇa resolved upon incarnations (as boar, man-lion, dwarf, man), and upon upholding the earth as a snake in Pātāla. Then uttering the syllable bho, he, from the voice (Sarasvatī) created Sārasvata Apāntaratamas, whom he caused to distribute the Vedas in the [Manv]antara of Manu Svāyambhuva, saying that he should do thus in each Manvantara, and, when Tishya (i.e. Kali-yuga) had set in, he should become the father of the Kauravas, etc., and distribute the Vedas into diverse classes, and be of a dark complexion, born from M.-ṛ. Parāçara in Vasishṭha's (the mind-born son of Brahmán) line by a maiden; he should know the past, the present, and the future; not he, but his son, should be freed from passion (rāgāt); he should see Kṛshṇa; Sūrya's son Çanaiçcara [i.e. the planet Saturn] will be a great Manu [read with B. Manur = Manu Sāvarṇi? during his Manvantara Vyāsa will be one of the seven Ṛshis]; during that Manvantara thou shalt be the foremost of the class beginning with Manu (Manv-ādi-gaṇa-pūrvakaḥ [i.e. of the Manu, gods, Ṛshis, etc., in the respective Manvantara])." Vyāsa said: "I am he that was born as Apāntaratamas; I underwent, in days of yore, the austerest penances."—Vaiçampāyana said: the preceptors (vaktṛ, vettṛ) of the diverse systems (jñānāni) are: 1) of Sāṅkhya: the great Ṛ. Kapila; 2) of Yoga (read yogasya with B.): the primeval (purātanaḥ) Hiraṇyagarbha; 3) of the Vedas: Ṛ. Apāntaratamas, by some called Prācīnagarbha; 4) of Pāçupata: Çiva (the son of Brahmán); 5) of Pañcarātra (B. Pā°): Bhagavat [i.e. Nārāyaṇa], and he may be seen in all the systems. The Sāṅkhya, Yoga, and Vedas are eternal; those conversant with the Pañcarātra (B. Pā°) enter Nārāyaṇa; all acts spring from Ṛ. Nārāyaṇa (XII, 350).—Janamejaya asked whether there are many Purushas or only one, etc. Vaiçampāyana said that in the Sāṅkhya and Yoga many Purushas are spoken of; but as the many Purushas have only one origin (yoniḥ), so the one Purusha is the universe (viçvaṃ) above the qualities (guṇādhihaṃ), citing the Vedas, etc. (ξξ), and the old narrative of the discourse between Brahmán and Tryambaka (Çiva), i.e. Brahma-Rudra-saṃvāda (d) (XII, 351-2).

Nivātakavacāntaka ("the destroyer of the Nivātakavacas) = Arjuna: VII, 3137; XIV, 2098, 2229.

[Nivātakavacayuddhaparvan(°va).] ("Arjuna's combat with the Nivātakavacas," the 39th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.) § 441: One day, when the Pārthas were thinking of Arjuna, they saw Indra's chariot (in which Indra had slain seven phalanxes of Diti's sons), driven by Mātali, illuminating the sky, and Arjuna descended and saluted each of them; Mātali also greeted and instructed them, and then returned in the chariot to Indra. Arjuna then gave to Draupadī precious gems, etc., presented to him by Indra. Then he related all as it had happened, and slept that night with the two sons of Mādrī (III, 165). The next morning Indra visited them under the sound of musical instruments, etc., and blessed Yudhishṭhira, and advised him to repair to Kāmyaka. Blessing upon the reader (III, 166).—§ 442: When Indra had gone, Arjuna related his journey from Kāmyaka (see §§ 330-3), etc. (of mountains he mentioned only Bhṛgutuṅga, where he spent one night and subsequently saw the brahman; then Himavat, where the meeting with the Kirāta took place on the first day of the fifth month after the beginning of his penances; the Kirāta multiplied a hundredfold and a thousandfold, and was transformed in various manners; Arjuna in vain employed the Vāyavya, Sthūṇākarṇa (see Nīl.), Jāla (i.e. Vāruṇa, Nīl.), and the Çalabhāstra, and showers of shafts and stones, as the Kirāta swallowed them up all; Arjuna in vain discharged the Brahmāstra) (III, 167).—§ 443: Arjuna continued his narrative (see §§ 334-7): he passed the night after the meeting with the Kirāta at that place, and in the morning he saw again the same brahman (= Indra), and in the evening he had the visit of the Lokapālas; the weapons that Indra promised to teach him were: those of Vāyu, Agni, the Vasus, Varuṇa, the Maruts, the Sādhya and Paitāmaha weapons, those of the Gandharvas, Uragas (i.e. Snakes), and Rākshasas, and all the Vaishṇava and Nairṛta weapons [v. 12020 foll.]; in the chariot of Indra, Mātali wondered that Arjuna was not jerked, though Indra always himself gets jerked at the first pull by the steeds [v. 12030]; when he had learnt the weapons, Indra said that now even the gods could not conquer him (v. 12054); he had received knowledge of fifteen weapons with five modes of using them, viz. prayoga [discharge], upasaṃhāra [withdrawal], āvṛtti [redischarge], prāyaçcitta [revival of harmless beings slain by any weapon, PCR., Nīl.], and pratighāta [revival of weapons baffled by those of the enemies, PCR., Nīl.] (vv. 12058–9); Indra asked him, as his fee, to slay the Nivātakavacas, who were thirty millions (tisraḥ koṭyaḥ) in number and dwelt in the ocean, and gave him the chariot (conducted by Mātali), upon which he (Indra) had vanquished Bali (Baliṃ Vairocaniṃ, v. 12068), Çambara, Bala, Vṛtra, Prahlāda, and Naraka, and millions of Daityas, and "this" diadem, and ornaments like his own, and the impenetrable mail, and fastened "this" durable (ajarāṃ) string to the Gāṇḍīva, and the gods gave him the shell Devadatta, through which Indra had conquered the worlds (cf. § 446)(III, 168).—§ 444: Arjuna continued: When he came to the ocean, he saw at a short distance the Daitya city filled with Dānavas. Mātali drove the chariot with force, and the Dānavas shut the gates. Then Arjuna blew the Devadatta, and the Nivātakavacas appeared with iron javelins, maces, clubs, hatchets, sabres, discs, çataghnīs, bhuçuṇḍīs, and swords, and sounded dissonant musical instruments. The Devarshis, the Dānavarshis, the Brahmarshis, and the Siddhas came to the battle (III, 169). With arrows inspired with mantras relating to the Brahman-weapon (Brahmāstraparimantritaiḥ), then with the Mādhava (PCR. Māghava) weapon and the Gāṇḍīva Arjuna killed innumerable Nivātakavacas, and the 10,000 horses yoked at the chariot conducted by Mātali trampled upon them (III, 170). Arjuna reduced a shower of crags to powder by the Mahendra weapon, then dried up showers of water by the weapon Viçoshana, that he had acquired from Indra; then he annihilated fire by the water weapon (salilāstra), and by the stone weapon (çailena mahāstreṇa) he repeatedly resisted the wind. Then darkness enveloped the world; the steeds turned away, Mātali fell off, and the golden lash fell from his hand; as Mātali was stupefied, a terrible fear seized Arjuna; Mātali said that he had conducted Indra's chariot in the battle for the sake of nectar, and in the battles with Çambara, Vṛtra, Vairocani, etc., but never had he lost his senses before. Arjuna comforted Mātali and repeatedly frustrated the magic of the enemy, and Mātali again conducted the chariot. Then on a sudden Arjuna did not see the Dānavas, who had become hidden by illusion (māyā) (III, 171). Arjuna then fought with invisible weapons. Then they withdrew the illusion and entered their city. The fallen and their weapons covered the ground so that the horses had to proceed in the sky. The Nivātakavacas remaining invisible, covered the welkin with crags; others, entering into the earth, seized the legs of the horses and the wheels of the chariot. Arjuna became distressed, but being advised by Mātali, he applied the thunderbolt, inspiring the Gāṇḍīva with mantras, so that the arrows sent by the thunderbolt, becoming thunderbolts, penetrated the illusions and killed the Nivātakavacas. While the wives of Dānavas were bewailing and at last fled to their palaces, Arjuna and Mātali entered the city, that was superior to that of the gods (to that of Indra, v. 12188). Mātali told him that this was originally the city of Indra, but the gods had been driven away from it by the Nivātakavacas, who had through austerities gratified Pitāmaha and obtained from him the boons, that they might reside here and be free from danger from the gods. When Indra applied to Svayambhū, he was told that he himself in another body should destroy them. As the gods were unable to slay them, Indra had given those weapons to Arjuna, so that he might destroy them, Then Arjuna and Mātali again went to the abode of the gods (III, 172). —§ 445: While returning he beheld a celestial city, moving at will, with trees of gems, etc., with four gates, etc., and Mātali told him it was Hiraṇyapura, made by Brahmán himself for the great Asuras, the Paulomas, and Kālakañjas, as the Daiteyī Pulomā and the Mahāsurī Kālakā had by practising austerities for 1,000 celestial years obtained from Svayambhū that their offspring should suffer little misfortune, be incapable of being killed by gods, and obtain an aërial, etc., city, invincible even by the gods, Maharshis, Yakshas, Gandharvas, Pannagas, Asuras, and Rākshasas. Brahmán had destined that Arjuna, a mortal, should kill them. "Therefore destroy them with the thunderbolt." A battle ensued; the Asuras resorted to illusion; the city now entered into the earth, and now it rose upwards, etc. Shot with the iron shafts of Arjuna the city fell down. Then they environed him in 60,000 chariots, etc. Arjuna applied to Rudra, and seeing a man with three heads, nine eyes, etc., he applied the Raudra weapon to the Gāṇḍīva; when it had been hurled, there appeared forms of deer, lions, tigers, Garuḍas, Gandharvas, Yakshas, Asuras, Guhyakas, Nairṛtas, Yātudhānas, etc., by thousands. The Dānavas, some of whom had three heads, some four tusks, etc., were destroyed. Arjuna again worshipped Tripuraghna (i.e. Çiva). Mātali rejoiced and praised Arjuna. The wives of the Dānavas came out of the city bewailing the slain. Mātali took Arjuna to the abode of Indra, and related in detail to Indra Arjuna's achievement, and Indra with the Maruts (v. 12269: the gods) praised him, and said that gods, Dānavas, Rākshasas, Yakshas, Asuras, Gandharvas, birds, and serpents should not be able to resist him in fight, etc. (III, 173).—§ 446: Indra said that on the battlefield Bhīshma, Droṇa, Kṛpa, Karṇa, Çakuni, etc., should not amount to $\frac{1}{16}$ part of Arjuna. Then Indra gave him "this" golden garland, the shell Devadatta, etc. (see § 443). Then Indra told him to depart, "and thus after five years I come to you on the summit of this lower range of Gandhamādana (Gandhamādanapādasya)." Having promised that he should in the next morning show Yudhishṭhira all the celestial weapons, Arjuna passed that night there with all his brothers (III, 174).—§ 447: The next morning, when Arjuna was about to show the celestial weapons to Yudhishṭhira, the earth trembled, etc. The Brahmarshis, Siddhas, Maharshis, Devarshis, gods, Yakshas, Rākshasas, Gandharvas, etc., Pitāmaha, the Lokāpālas, and Mahādeva with his gaṇas appeared; Vāyu threw celestial garlands, sent by the gods, on Arjuna, the Gandharvas chanted ballads, and Apsarases danced; and sent by the gods Nārada came and prevailed upon Arjuna not to use the celestial weapons without necessity, as they would destroy the three worlds. Then the gods, etc., went whence they had come, and the Pāṇḍavas pleasantly dwelt in that same forest with Kṛshṇā (III, 175).

[Pañcaçikha-vākya(m)] ("the discourse of Pañcaçikha"). § 668*b* (Mokshadh.): Bhīshma said: The Mithilā king Janaka was always engaged in reflecting upon the courses of conduct that might lead to the attainment of Bráhman. One hundred preceptors always used to live in his palace. Given to the study of the Vedas, he was not very well satisfied with the speculations of his instructors on the character of the soul and their doctrines of extinction upon the dissolution of the body or of rebirth after death. Once the great ascetic Pañcaçikha Kāpileya came to Mithilā, having roamed over the earth. He seemed to have assumed the form of that great Ṛ. [and] Prajāpati, whom the Sāṅkhyas call Kapila; they say he was the first disciple of Āsuri [and] long-living. He was performing a mental sacrifice for 1,000 years (cf. Pañcasrotas). He was fully conversant with the Pañcarātra (i.e. "the sacrifice that leads to the state of Vishṇu", Nīl.) and the five sheaths that cover the soul, etc. He had approached one day a large concourse [of Ṛ.] following the Sāṅkhya doctrine (Kāpilaṃ), and instructed them about the Unmanifest; Āsuri had inquired of his preceptor (? so Nīl. and PCR.) and understood the distinction between the body and the soul, and had acquired celestial vision. For that assembly of Ṛ., Āsuri made his exposition of Bráhman. Pañcaçikha became a disciple of Āsuri; he lived on human milk; he was accepted as a son by the brāhmaṇī Kapilā, the wife of Āsuri, and used to suck her breasts. This was said to me by the holy one [i.e. Mārkaṇḍeya or Sanatkumāra, Nīl.]. Janaka, abandoning his 100 preceptors, began to follow Kāpileya (i.e. Pañcaçikha) upon the religion of emancipation which is explained in Sāṅkhya treatises. "Some say that, when ignorance is destroyed by knowledge, the destruction of existence itself follows [this opinion also is erroneous]." The king became filled with wonder (XII, 218). Continuation of the discourse between Pañcaçikha and the king on the topic of existence and non-existence after death. The Mithilā king (Maithilena), beholding his city burning in a conflagration, himself proclaimed (gītaṃ), "in this conflagration nothing of mine is burning." The king gave up his sorrows, etc. He who reads this discourse attains to emancipation (XII, 219).

[Pañcendropākhyāna(ṃ)] ("episode relating to the five Indras"). § 238 (cf. Vaivāhikap.): Vyāsa said to Drupada: In days of yore, when the gods were celebrating a great sacrifice in the forest of Naimisha, Yama, holding the office of çamitṛ, did not slay the creatures, so that their numbers increased very greatly. Soma, Çakra, Varuṇa, Kubera, the Sādhyas, the Rudras, the Vasus, the Açvins, etc., complained thereof to Prajāpati, who comforted them, saying that when the sacrifice was over Yama would again sweep away the inhabitants of the earth. The gods then returned to the place of the sacrifice, and saw a golden lotus carried along the Bhāgīrathī. Indra proceeded to the spot where the Gaṅgā issues, and saw a beautiful woman (it was Çrī), whose tears were being transformed into golden lotuses. She led him to Mahādeva, who as a handsome youth was seated with a young lady on a throne on one of the peaks of the Himavat, playing dice. When Indra spoke haughtily of himself, Mahadeva caused Çrī to paralyse him and lead him into a hole, where four Indras of old were confined in order to be reborn in the world of men, there to slay a large number of men, and then to regain the region of Indra. Their fathers should be Dharma, Vāyu, Maghavat, and the Açvins, Indra creating a person from himself to be the fifth among them. Their names were Viçvabhuj, Bhūtadhāman, Çibi, Çānti, and Tejasvin. The weeping woman (Çrī) was appointed to be their common wife in the world of men. Nārāyaṇa, to whom Īçāna (i.e. Çiva) and the five Indras repaired, approved of everything. The five Indras were reborn as the Pāṇḍavas, and Çrī as Draupadī. A white hair of Nārāyaṇa's became Baladeva, and a black Kṛshṇa, after having entered the wombs of Devakī and Rohiṇī. Having related this to Drupada, Vyāsa granted him celestial sight, so that he beheld the Pāṇḍavas endued with their former bodies.—§ 239: Vyāsa then related to Drupada the story of the damsel (= Çrī = Kṛshṇā) whom Çaṅkara, i.e. Çiva, appointed to be in a future birth the wife of five husbands (see § 220) (I, 197).

Pāṇḍavapraveçaparvan ("the section relating to the entrance of the Pāṇḍavas"). § 549: Questioned by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana related: Having obtained boons from Dharma, Yudhishṭhira returned to the hermitage and restored to the brahman his araṇī and mantha. Then he asked Arjuna to select some spot where they might dwell undiscovered. Arjuna mentioned some countries surrounding the kingdom of the Kurus (a). Yudhishṭhira chose the city of king Virāṭa, who was attached to the Pāṇḍavas. Yudhishṭhira would introduce himself as a brahman named Kaṅka, who was skilled in dice and had been the friend of Yudhishṭhira (IV, 1). Bhīmasena as a cook and wrestler named Vallava, who had served Yudhishṭhira; Arjuna (b–e) as a hermaphrodite, Bṛhannalā by name, who had served Kṛshṇā as a waiting-maid (IV, 2). Nakula as a keeper of horses, named Granthika, who had formerly been employed by Yudhishṭhira; Sahadeva as a cowherd, named Tantripāla; Kṛshṇā would serve Sudeshṇā (the queen of Virāṭa) as a sairindhrī, skilled in dressing hair, who had waited upon Kṛshṇā (IV, 3). Yudhishṭhira said: "Let our priest, with our charioteers and cooks, repair to the abode of Drupada and there maintain our agnihotra fires, and Indrasena, etc., with the empty chariots proceed to Dvāravatī, and the maid-servants go to the Pāñcālas, together with the charioteers and the cooks. Let all of them say that the Pāṇḍavas had left them at the Dvaitavana lake." Dhaumya advised the Pāṇḍavas as to how they should behave at court and performed the rites ordained in respect of departure, and then set out for the Pāñcālas, taking with him their sacred fires; Indrasena, etc., proceeded to the Yādavas (IV, 4). The Pāṇḍavas then proceeded in the direction of the southern bank of the river Kālindī and passed through the countries of the Yakṛllomas and the Çūrasenas, leaving behind on the right the country of the Pāñcālas and on the left that of the Daçārṇas. Arjuna carried Kṛshṇā. When they had reached the capital of Virāṭa, Arjuna, as Gāṇḍīva was known to all men, caused them to stow away their weapons in a çamī-tree near a cemetery. Nakula ascended the tree and tied the weapons fast. In the tree they hung up a corpse and said to the inquirers: "This is our mother, aged 180 years." They kept for themselves the names Jaya, Jayanta, Vijaya, Jayatsena, Jayadbala (IV, 5). Yudhishṭhira praised Durgā (f), who then showed herself to him and promised him victory, etc. (IV, 6). They then entered the city and were successively received by Virāṭa. Yudhishṭhira (naming himself Kaṅka Vaiyāghrapadya) was accepted as a courtier (IV, 7). Bhīmasena (naming himself Vallava) was accepted as a cook and a wrestler (IV, 8). Kṛshṇā was seen by the queen Sudeshṇā Kaikeyī and accepted as a sairindhrī; she said: "My five husbands, who are Gandharvas and sons of a Gandharva king, always protect me" (IV, 9). Sahadeva came clad in a cowherd's dress and speaking the dialect of cowherds, and said that he was a vaiçya named Arishṭanemi. He was accepted as the king's head cowherd (IV, 10). Then Arjuna appeared dressed as an eunuch and naming himself Bṛhannalā, and was accepted as a dancing master (IV, 11). Nakula, who named himself Granthika, likewise was accepted as the king's head horsekeeper (IV, 12).

[Pāṇḍurājyābhisheka] ("anointing of Pāṇḍu as a king"). § 173 (Sambhavap.): Upon the birth of those three children (§ 171), Kurujāṅgala, Kurukshetra, and the Kurus grew in prosperity, etc. The southern Kurus, in virtuous rivalry with the northern Kurus, walked about in the company of gods, ṛshis, and Cāraṇas. Virtuously ruled by Bhīshma, the kingdom was adorned with hundreds of caityas and yūpas. Dhṛtarāshṭra, Pāṇḍu, and Vidura were brought up by Bhīshma as if they were his own children, and became well exercised in archery, etc., and well read in the Itihāsas and Purāṇas and various sciences, and the Vedas and Vedāṅgas. Pāṇḍu excelled all men in archery, Dhṛtarāshṭra in personal strength, Vidura in devotion to virtue. Hāstinapura was the foremost among cities. Because of Dhṛtarāshṭra's blindness and Vidura's being a pārasava (son of a brahman with a çūdra woman), Pāṇḍu became king. One day Bhīshma addressed Vidura [about the marriage of the two princes] (I, 109).

Āstīkap.): One day king P., the son of Abhimanyu, when hunting, having pierced a deer lost sight of it. He then asked the muni Çamīka, but received no answer as the muni was then observing the vow of silence; in anger the king then placed upon the muni's shoulder a dead snake and returned to his capital Hāstinapura. Of this the muni's son Çṛṅgin was informed in a quarrel by his companion Kṛça (I, 40), and then cursed P., saying that within seven nights he should be stung to death by Takshaka. The muni was not pleased with the curse, as P. properly protected his subjects (I, 41). Therefore he sent his disciple Gauramukha to inform P., who became very repentant and sorrowful. A mansion was erected upon a solitary column and well guarded. The seventh day the brahman Kāçyapa was coming desirous of curing the king. Takshaka in the shape of an old brahman met with Kāçyapa (I, 42). As Kāçyapa revived a banyan which had been reduced to ashes by being bitten by Takshaka, Takshaka gave to Kāçyapa more wealth than what he expected from P., and having ascertained by means of yoga that P.'s span of life was at an end, Kāçyapa retired. Takshaka went to Hāstinapura, and hearing that P. was protected by poison-neutralizing mantras and medicines, he caused some serpents in the guise of ascetics to present the king with kuça-grass, water, and fruits, in one of which he himself was concealed as a tiny ugly insect. As such he appeared when P. was eating the fruit. P. said: "The sun is setting, to-day I have no more fear from poison; therefore let this insect becoming Takshaka bite me so that the words of the ascetic may be rendered true." Then he placed the insect on his neck and was bitten by Takshaka, who coiled round his neck and uttered a tremendous roar (I, 43): I, 40, 1664 (Kauravavaṃçajaḥ), 1670, 1673 (*rājā . . .
